15. At-Home and Abroad: a Sketch-Book of Life, Seemgry, and Men, 1859, 12mo; last ed., 1869, 12mo.

"A book of light and varied reading, over which any one may be glad to while away half an hour. But it is pleasantly rather than correctly executed."—Lon. Athen., 1859, ii. 738.

Second Series, N. York, March, 1862, 12mo; 4th ed., April, 1862, 12mo; Lon., May, 1862, p. 8vo; new ed., N. York, 1869, 12mo.

"Mr. Bayard Taylor has gained in brilliancy at the expense of simplicity. . . . On the whole, this is a fair parlour-window book; but it is haggard."—Lon. Athen., 1862, i. 753. See, also, 787.

16. The Poet's Journal, Bost. and Lon., 1862, 16mo, pp. 204; Bost., 1863, 12mo. This may be called a poetical domestic autobiography.

"His earlier poems were not only deserving of praise for their intrinsic excellence, but they were rich with a promise which has been amply fulfilled in his later productions; and it is gratifying to add that his last volume is his best."—N. Amer. Rev., Jan. 1863, 268.

Also commended by Lon. Athen., 1863, i. 224.

Dr. Griswold gave his verdict, in 1865, that, "eminent as he is as a writer of travels, his highest and most enduring distinction will be from his poetry; . . . his travels will hereafter be to his poems no more than those of Smollett are to his extraordinary novels."—Poets and Poetry of America, 16th ed., 609.

Uniform editions of his Travels were published by George P. Putnam, of New York, in 5 vols. 12mo, 1855; 6 vols. 12m., 1855; 8 vols. 12mo, 1859; and he issued in 1862 two uniform editions, (Caxton edition and Popular edition,) each in 10 vols., small 8vo, of Taylor's Prose Writings: viz., Travels, (Nos. 2, 4, 7, 8, 9, 13, 14, and 15, supra.) 9 vols.; A Romance of American Life, (a new work,) 1 vol. Mr. Taylor prepared and arranged a Cyclopaedia of Modern Travel, Cincinnati, 1867, r. 8vo, pp. 956; contributed notes on Low Chow and Japan to the Narrative of Perry's Expedition, (see HAWKS, FRANCIS LISTER, D.D., No. 9, and N. Amer. Rev., lxxviii. 226, 269, by E. L. Hale,) and to Voices from the Press, N. York, 1860, 8vo; and an Introduction to The Life, Travels, and Books of Alexander Humboldt, N. York, 1859, 12mo; is the author of The Greeting to America, a prize poem written for Jenny Lind; and has contributed to the United States Gazette, Putnam's Magazine, Saturday Evening Post, Literary World, New York Mercury, Independent, Atlantic Monthly, Harbinger and Home, &c. See, also, BERTON, RICHARD FRANCIS, No. 7; RIPLEY, GEORGE, No. 4. Nor should we omit to notice the oral descriptions, conveyed in public lectures, of foreign countries and peoples with which Mr. Taylor has been, for many years past, in the habit of entertaining audiences in various parts of the United States.

We are now (1870) able to enlarge the list of Mr. Taylor's publications. 17. Hannah Thurston; a Story of American Life, N. York, Nov. 1863, 12mo; 14th 1000, Nov. 1864; Lon., Nov. 1863, 3 vols. p. 8vo; red. to 24s., Mar. 1864. In Russian, St. Petersburg, 1864. In German, by the author's wife, Marie Tayl., daughter of Prof. Hansen, the distinguished German astronomer, Hamburg, May, 1864. This was commended by many authorities, of which the London Saturday Review was not one. See Atlantic Mon., Jan. 1864, and New Englander, July, 1864. 18. John Godfrey's Fortunes, Related by Himself; a Story of American Life, N. York, Nov. 15, 1864, r. 12mo; 9th 1000, Jan. 11, 1865; Lon., Nov. 1864, 3 vols. p. 8vo. In German, 1865.

"Mr. Taylor took a great stride forward when he produced his recent story, 'Hannah Thurston'; but he never showed his full force until now. . . . The style is excellent,—clear, decided, and occasionally sparkling."—Dr. R. S. MACKENZIE.

19. The Story of Keenut; a Tale of American Life, N. York, April 2, 1866, cr. 8vo; Lon., 1866, 2 vols. p. 8vo.

"In this novel Mr. Taylor has so far surpassed his former efforts in extended fiction, as to approach the excellence attained in his briefer stories."—Atlantic Mon., June, 1866, 775.

20. The Picture of St. John, Bost., 1866, 12mo, pp. 320.

"It will be deservedly praised for its artistic completeness."—The Standard Table, Oct. 13, 1866.

"This poem has the prime virtue of narrative fiction,—coherence and easy movement."—Atlantic Mon., July, 1867.

21. Colorado; a Summer Trip, N. York, 1867, 12mo; Lon., 1867, p. 8vo. This is vol. x. of Putnam's uniform edition of Taylor's Travels.

Auerbach's Villa on the Rhine, Author's edition, with a Portrait and Biographical Sketch, N. York, Leypoldt, 1869, 4 Parts; also in 2 vols. 25. The Ballad of Abraham Lincoln; with Illustrations in Colours by S. Eytinge, Jr., 1869, (Fields, Osgood & Co.'s Uncle Sam Series.) He contributed to the American edition of Lampadius's Life of F. M. Bartholdy, Phila. and N. York, 1865, 16mo, and is represented in Lyrics of Loyalty, 1864, 24mo. A collective edition of the Poems of Bayard Taylor—containing Poems of the Orient, Poems of Home and Travel, The Poet's Journal, &c.—was issued by Ticknor & Fields, Bost., 1864, 32mo, blue and gold; also 1865, 16mo; a collective edition of his Novels was published by G. P. Putnam & Son, N. York, 1869, 3 vols. 12mo; and the last collective edition of his Travels, (comprising Nos. 2, 4, 7, 8, 9, 13, 14, 15, 21, 23,) in 10 vols. 12mo, was issued by the same house also in 1869. He is now (1870) employed upon a translation of both parts of Faust, which "is said to preserve all the metrical peculiarities of the original German, even to the double rhyme, (a very difficult task in English,) without the addition of a word or thought not warranted by the text. The translation will be accompanied by a full and practical commentary, in which the mysteries of the great drama will be elucidated."

3. Confusion Worse Confounded, &c., by Indignatio, 1772, 8vo. An attack on Warburton's Account, &c.: see Evans, Arise or Rise; Disraeli's Quarrels of Authors, (Warburton.) 4. Full Answer to a View of the Internal Evidence of the Christian Religion, 1777, 8vo. See JANIN, SOANE, M.P., No. 7. 5. Thoughts on the Nature of the Grand Apostasy; with Reflections on the 15th Chapter of Mr. Gibbon's History, 1781-82, 8vo.

"The stupendous title, Thoughts on the Causes of the Grand Apostasy, at first agitated my nerves, till I discovered that it was the apostasy of the whole church, since the Council of Nice, from Mr. Taylor's private religion. His book is a thorough mixture of high enthusiasm and low buffoonery, and the Millennium is a fundamental article of his creed."—Gibbon, Anon., in Miscell. Works, ed. 1837, 97, n.

Referring to these Thoughts of Taylor's, Lord Brougham remarks (Lives of Men of Letters Time Geo. III., ed. 1855, 399) that the author was "alike wrong-headed and enthusiastic."

5. The Eve of the Conquest, and other Poems, 1847, 12mo. See No. 4.

"Mr. Taylor's short poems are characterized by the same qualities which distinguish 'Philip Van Artevelde' and 'Edwin the Fair.' That robust strength which belongs to truth, and that noble grace which flows from strength when combined with poetic beauty, are exhibited in them not less distinctly than in the larger works by which his reputation has been established."—Edin. Rev., lxxxix. 353, (Jan. in Eclec. Mag., xvi. 100.)

"The 'Largo Varso' will be, we suspect, the favourite with most readers."—Blackw. Mag., Nov. 1851.

Taylor, Isaac, the second, J.L.D., son of the preceding, b. at Lavenham, Suffolk, 1787, after a course of theological study with a view to the Dissenting pulpit, and some attention to the literature of the Bar, settled down (at Stanford Rivers) as a literary recluse,—communicating to the world, from time to time, the results of his researches and meditations. In 1818 he was engaged by the editor, Josiah Condor, (p. 418, supra), as a regular contributor to the Eclectic Review. He died June 28, 1865. That he has not been an idler in the Republic of Letters, the following list of his works (some of which were originally published without his name) gives ample evidence.

1. Elements of Thought, Lon., 1823, 8vo; 2d Amer. ed., N. York, 1851, 12mo; 10th ed., Lon., 1853, 12mo; 11th ed., 1867, p. 8vo; red. to 4s., 1868.

"He is an independent more than an original thinker. He is rather exempt from fear than animated by ardent courage in announcing the fruits of his enquiries. A great master of language, he is himself but too often mastered by it. He is too much the creature, to become the reformer, of his age. His assiduity to please is fatal to his desire to command. His efforts to move the will are defeated by his success in dazzling the fancy. Yet his books exhibit a character, both moral and intellectual, from the study of which the reader can hardly fail to rise a wiser and a better man."—MR. JAMES STEPHEN. *Edin. Taylor, Jane, the daughter of Isaac Taylor the first and Ann Taylor the first, was b. in London, Sept. 23, 1783, d. in Ongar, Essex, April 12, 1824. Her first production which appeared in print was the poem of The Beggar Boy, published in the Miner's Pocket-Book (to which her sister Ann had contributed for some years) in 1804; she afterwards united with her sister in the composition of the juvenile works already noticed, (see TAYLOR, ANN, the second,) and subsequently published the following: 1. Display; a Tale, Lon., 1813, 12mo; Bost., 1815, 12mo; last ed., Lon., 1848, 12mo. Commended by Lon. Month. Rev., 1816, i. 325. 2. Her contributions to The Associate Minstrels, a vol. of poetry, were repub. in vol. ii. of No. 3. Portions of her writings have been pub. separately in book-form in America, and the following collections have also appeared there: 1. The Writings of Jane Taylor, Bost., 1835, 3 vols. 12mo. 2. The Pleasures of Taste, and other Stories selected from the Writings of Miss Jane Taylor; with a Sketch of her Life by Mrs. Sarah J. Hale, 12mo, pp. 288, (see N. Amer. Rev., April, 1840, 506); new ed., N. York, 1847, 18mo. A notice of Miss Taylor will also be found in Mrs. Edward's Literary Ladies of England, ii. 262-75. Moir remarks that the poetic reputation of Jane Taylor rests "on her 'Squire's Pew,' a lyric of exquisite originality and beauty," (Sketches of the Poet. Lit., &c., Lect. VI.) a eulogy which we heartily endorse.

Taylor, Mrs. Janet, "the Mrs. Somerville of the marine world," is well known as the teacher of the Nautical and Mathematical Academy at the east end of London, and as the author of the following valuable works: 1. Luni-solar and Horary Tables, with their Application in Nautical Astronomy, Lon., 1833, 8vo; last ed., 1851, 8vo. 2. Lunar Tables, 1834, 8vo; 2d ed., (1835,) 8vo. 3. Epitome of Navigation and Nautical Astronomy; with Improved Lunar Tables, new ed., 1851, 8vo. 4. Diurnal Register for Barometer, Sympiesometer, Thermometer, and Hygrometer, 2d ed., 1844, ob. 8vo. 5. Planisphere of the Fixed Stars, 1846, 4to. 6. Hand-Book to the Local Marine Board Examinations. 7. Guide to the Use of Maury's Charts: see MAURY, MATTHEW FONTAINE, LL.D. In consequence of his illness, completed and pressed by his brother, Isaac Taylor.

Taylor, Jeremy, D.D., a descendant of Rowland Taylor, LL.D., the eminent Reformer and martyr, (see Engl. Acts and Monuments), was b. 1613, at Cambridge, where his father was a barber; entered a sizar of Caius College, Cambridge, 1626, and became Chaplain to Archbishop Laud and to Charles I.; Fellow of All Souls College, Oxford, 1636; Rector of Uppingham, Rutlandshire, 1642; registered by the Parliament, 1642, and after the death of the royalists suffered frequent but short imprisonment during the first years of the Protectorate kept a school in Wales, (in conjunction with William Nicholas, afterwards Bishop of Gloucester, and William Wyatt, afterwards Archbishop of Lincoln,) and officiated as chaplain to the Earl of Carberry, at Golden Grove, Carmarthenshire; in 1658 settled in Ireland, and exercised his ministry alternately at Lisburn and Portmore; returned to London in the spring of 1660, and signed the loyal Declaration of the Nobility and Gentry, dated April 24, thirty-five days before the Restoration; was consecrated Bishop of Down and Connor, January, 1661; made a member of the Irish Privy Council in February, intimated with the diocese of Down in March, and in the same year was elected Vice-Chancellor of the University of Dublin; &c. at Lisburn, August 13, 1667, and was interred in the choir of the cathedral at Downmore. By his first wife, Phoebe Langdale, he had four sons, all of whom he survived; by his second wife, Joanna Bridges, a natural daughter of his royal patron and friend Charles I. (when Prince of Wales,) and mistress of an estate at Carmarthen, he had three daughters, all of whom survived him: 1, Phoebe, d. single; 2, Josura, married Edward Harrison, M.P. for Lisburn; 3, Mary, married Dr. Francis Marsh, afterwards Archbishop of Dublin.

Bishop Taylor's funeral sermon was preached by his chaplain, Doctor George Rust, his episcopal successor in the see of Downmore; and a more florid eulogy has seldom been pronounced. We quote a few sentences:

"He was none of God's ordinary works, but his Endowments were so many and so great, so really made him a Miracle. Nature had befriended him much in his Constitution; for he was a person of a most sweet and obliging humour, of great candour and ingenuity; and there was so much of salt and sharpness of wit, and pretentious of address, in his familiar discourses, as made his conversation have all the pleasures of a comedy, and all the usefulness of a sermon. . . . To these advantages of nature, and excellency of his spirit, he added an indefatigable industry, and God gave a plentiful benediction; for there were very few kinds of learning but he was a master and a great master in them. He was a rare Humanist, and hugely versed in all the polite parts of Learning, and thoroughly conversed in all the ancient Moralists, Greek and Roman Poets and Orators, and was not unacquainted with the refined wits of the later ages, whether French or Italian. . . . This great Prince had the good humour of a Gentleman, the eloquence of an Orator, the fancy of a Poet, the acuteness of a Schoolman, the profoundness of a Philosopher, the wisdom of a Chancellor, the sagacity of a Prophet, the reason of an Angel, and the piety of a Saint. He had devotion enough for a Cloister, learning enough for a University, and wit enough for a College of Virginals. And for his parts and endowments been parcelled out among his poor Clergy that he left behind him, it would perhaps have made one of the best discourses in the world."

"He was esteemed," says Wood, "by the generality of persons a complete artist, accurate logician, exquisite, quick, and acute in his reasonings, a person of great fluency in his language and of prodigious readiness in his learning. A noted Presbyterian [Idea. Jewish, in his Epist. to the Reader before Certain Letters between him and Jer. Taylor, 1660, fol.] also (his antagonist) doth ingeniously confess that Dr. Taylor is a man of admirable wit, great parts, both quick and elegant pen, is of abilities in critical learning and of profound skill in antiquity."—Athen. Oxon., Bliss's ed., iii. 794, q. v. (and vide Index) for an account of Taylor and his writings.

We proceed to the enumeration of his principal and several of his minor works, with the dates of the first and some of the early editions and of a number of recent editions. 1. The Sacred Order and Offices of Episcopacy, by Divine Institution, Apostolical Tradition and Catholic Practice, Oxon., 1642, 4to; Lon., 1647, 4to; with Clerus Domini, N. York, 1844, 16mo. Lowndes (Brit. Lib., 383) mentions an ed. Oxon., 1638; which we doubt. It was written by command of Charles I.

2. Discourse concerning Prayer ex tempore; or, by Pretence of the Spirit, in Justification of Authorized and Set Forms of Liturgie, Lon., 1646, 4to; anon.; 1647, 4to; anon.; 1649, 4to; with his name. Bishop Heber classifies this among the best of his Polemical Discourses.

3. New and Easy Institution of Grammar, 1647, 4to. In this he was assisted by William Wyatt, to whom the book has been ascribed.

4. Discourse of the Liberty of Prophesying, showing the Unreasonableness of Prescribing to Other Men's Faith, and the Iniquity of Persecuting Different Opinions, 1647, 4to; 1650, 4to. Many edits. With an Intro. Essay by Rev. R. Cattermole, 1844, 12mo. See RUTHERFORD, SAMUEL, No. 9, (an answer to this); STILLINGFLEET, EDWARD, No. 1.

"The most curious, and perhaps the ablest, of all his compositions. His admirable 'Liberty of Prophesying' was composed, as he tells Lord Hutton, under a host of grievous disadvantages: in adversity and want; without books or leisure; and with no other resources than those which were supplied by a long familiarity with the sacred volume, and a powerful mind imbued with all the learning of past ages."—Major Hutton: Life of Taylor, 1861.

"The argument of this important book rests on one leading maxim, derived from the Arminian divines, as it was in them from Erasmus and Acontius, that the fundamental truths of Christianity are comprised in narrow compass, not beyond the Apostles' Creed in its literal meaning; that all the rest is matter of disputation, and too uncertain, for the most part, to warrant our condemning those who differ from us, as if their error must be criminal."—HALLAM: Lit. Hist. of Europe, 4th ed., 1854, ii. 84-85. See, also, 12.

"To the principles of Bishop Taylor, first, perhaps, displayed in this admirable work, may be traced the still more clear and irrefragable reasonings of Locke, and finally the Tolerant Act itself."—Low. Quar. Rev. See, also, Edin. Rev., 1822, 312, n. (by Henry Rogers.)

"This splendid work luxuriates in a richness of imagery, and a grand elegance of expression, which breathe in every sentence the vital and angelic spirit of poetry. . . . I am acquainted with no work of Bishop Taylor's (I may say of any author) in which more practical wisdom may be found, a greater knowledge of the human heart, and a more touching application."—Bishop Hare's Life of Taylor. "His excellent discourses, which are enough of themselves to furnish a library, and will be famous to all succeeding generations for the exactness of wit, profundity of judgment, richness of fancy, clearness of expression, copiousness of invention, and general felicity to all the purposes of a Christian."—Watts: Athol. Comm. Hist. ed., 1812, 122.

"As essays for the closet, and as intended for those into whose hands they usually fall, few compositions can be named so eminently distinguished by fancy, by judgment, by learning, and by powers of reasoning; few, where the mind is so irresistibly allured; or where so much luxuriance of imagination, or so much mellowness of style, are made the vehicles of divinity so sound, and holiness so practical."—Bishop Hare's Life of Taylor.

"The sermons of Jeremy Taylor are . . . far, indeed, above any that had preceded them in the English Church. An imagination essentially poetical, and sparing none of the decorations which, by critical rules, are deemed almost peculiar to verse; a warm tone of piety, sweetness, and clarity; an accumulation of circumstantial accessories whenever he reasons, or persuades, or describes; an erudition pouring itself forth in quotation till his sermons become in some places almost a garland of flowers from all other writers, and especially from those of classical antiquity, never before so redundantly scattered from the pulpit, distinguish Taylor from his contemporaries by their degree, as they do from most of his successors by their kind. His sermon on the Marriage Ring, on the House of Feasting, on the Apples of Sodom, may be named without disparagement to others, which perhaps ought to stand in equal place. But they are not without considerable faults, some of which have just been hinted. The eloquence of Taylor is great, but it is not eloquence of the highest class; it is far too Asiatic, too much in the style of the declaimers of the fourth century, by the study of whom he had probably vitiated his taste; his learning is ill placed, and his arguments often as much so; not to mention that he has the common defect of alleging nugatory proofs; his vehemency loses its effect by the ciceronian of his pleonastic language; his sentences are of endless length, and hence not only altogether unmusical, but not always reducible to grammar. But he is still the greatest ornament of the English pulpit up to the middle of the seventeenth century; and we have no reason to believe, or rather much reason to believe, that he had any competitor in other languages."—HALLAM: *Lit. "English prose was in his time in a progressive state. It had been advanced very far by the genius of Sidney and the wisdom of Hooker; but the pedantry of the reign of James had done much to eclipse its lustre. In Taylor it broke out from its obscurity with energy and brightness. His Polemical Discourses exhibit a specimen of English composition superior to any that had gone before."—Bishop Hare's Funeral Sermon on Jeremy Taylor.

"From these Polemical Discourses the theological student must derive the soundest instruction and most important advantages."—Below.

13. Discourse of the Nature, Offices, and Measures of Friendship, with Rules of Conducting it: Written in answer to a Letter from the most ingenious and virtuous M. K. P., [Mrs. Katherine Philips, q. v.] by J. T., D.D., 1657, 12mo: 2d ed., with a second title-page, viz.: To which is added, Two Letters written to Persons newly changed in their Religion, &c., by J. T., D.D., 1657, 12mo, pp. 176; 1662, 12mo; 1678. Of the Discourse of Friendship, Bishop Heber observes,

"It may, without impropriety, be considered as the earliest of his classic writings." He commends the lady for having "suggested such a theme to Taylor, inasmuch as it was calculated, more than most others, to elicit the fire of his peculiar eloquence; and accordingly he has produced a splendid and powerful essay."—Life of Taylor.

"Of this largest and most laborious of Bishop Taylor's works it has been said, without exaggeration, that it is the production of retentive memory and laborious research, of learning various and profound, and of reasoning close and dispassionate."—Bishop Hare's Life of Taylor.

"The most extensive and learned work on casuistry which has appeared in the English language. . . . With many of Taylor's excellences, his vast fertility, and his frequent acuteness, the Ductor Dubitantium exhibits his characteristic defects; the waste of quotations is even greater than in his other writings, and his own exuberance of mind degenerates into an intolerable prolixity. His solution of moral difficulties is often unsatisfactory; after an accumulation of arguments and authorities, we have the disappointment to perceive that the knot is never untied nor uncut; there seems a want of close investigation of principles, a frequent confusion and obscurity, which are two chief faults, excessive display of erudition and redundancy of language, conspire to produce. Paley is no doubt often more social, and sometimes mistaken; yet in clearness, in common sense, in freedom from impertinent reference to authority, he is superior to Taylor."—HALLAM: Lit. Hist. of Europe, III. 391. See, also, 400, 410.

"He has handled his subject with more than ordinary powers of argumentation and casuistical reasoning; but his habits of thinking had too much of the imaginative and exorcising cast to fit him thoroughly for that severe method of analysis which this particular train of investigation demands."—T. S. GRANGER, D.D.

"A brilliancy of imagination appears in all his writings; but his 'Doctor Dubitantium' is a signal proof of his judgment."—GRANGER: Biog. Hist. of Eng., 6th ed., 1824, v. 22.

"The last in date, and one of the best and most useful of his devotional works, is his 'Worthy Communicant,' which is indeed, as its subject required, not only devotional, but practical. But of this "Homer of Divines," (William Thompson: Granger's Biog. Hist., v. 21, n.) this "Shakespeare of the Church," (Hannah More,) this "Spenser of English Theological Literature," we must needs quote some more opinions of eminent authorities. Of the continued popularity of his works after his decease, a distinguished author, born less than four years after Taylor was gathered to his fathers, thus writes:

"We have the Reverend Doctor's Treatises standing, as it were, in the front of the order of authors, and as the foremost of those Good Books used by the polite and most refined Devotee of either sex. They maintain the principal place in the study of almost every elegant and high Divine. They stand in Edition and other volumes, adorned with variety of pictures, gildings, and other decorations, on the advanced shelves in glass-look-boards of the lady's closets. They are in use at all seasons, and for all places; as well for Church Service as for Closet Preparations, and, in short, may vie with any devotional books in British Christendom."—Edin. Rev., Shakespeare's Characteristic, III. 327.

One of the most zealous of Roman Catholics and most eloquent of men characterizes him as "the highest style" and learned Jeremy Taylor, "the whole Protestant church boasts no richer name."—Christian Review.

Some of his Protestant commentators are not disposed to deal in unqualified commendation of the tendency of portions of his works:

"Bishop Taylor, as a writer of the first-rate powers, with a fine imagination, and much devotion, holiness, and humility. Yet he is too much, who has too little of the good things of the gospel. . . . He fell into something of Pedegian errors, and, like Warburton, did not consider the immortality of the soul revealed to the Patriarchs. It is easy to be regretted that prayers for the dead have received countenance from some passages in his writings. . . . A fine, false imagination, with great devotion, but a tone of divinity below that of the Reformers, and in some material points erroneous."—Rev. E. Rickard's Christian Student, 4th ed., 249, 250.

"In learning he was scarcely inferior to any theologian whatever; and in richness of imagination he is superior to all. On the subject of original sin, and of the justification of man before God, his sentiments differed from those of the established church of which he was a member; but on other points of Christian doctrine his views were generally correct. He is one of those few authors 'the dust of whose works is gold,' and as long as the English language is understood, his volumes will constitute some of its choicest treasures. Through the whole of his numerous writings the flame of genius and of devotion burns with undimmed and unexampled strength."—Dr. E. Williams, Christian Preacher, 5th ed., 363.

We continue our quotations:

Taylor and Barrow are incomparably the greatest preachers and divines of their age. But my predilection is for Taylor. He has all the abundance and solidity of the other, with a ray of lightning of his own, which, if he did not derive it from Demosthenes and Tully, has at least as generous and noble an origin. His is true they are both incompact, or, rather, exuberant. But it is for such little preachers as the Preacher of Lincoln's Inn [himself] to hide their barrenness by the finicalness of culture."—Bishop Warburton to Hurd: Letters from a Late Eminent Prelate, Lett. II. (q. r.) n.

Hooker is the object of our reverence, Barrow of our admiration, and Jeremy Taylor of our love. Few have equalled the variety of learning, fertility of imagination, in vigour of thinking, in rectitude of intention and holiness of life. His controversial writings, fraught as they are with guileless ardour, with peerless eloquence, and with the richest stores of knowledge, historical, classical, scholastic, and theological, may be considered as irrefragable proofs of his pure, affectionate, and disinterested attachment to the Reformed Church of England. . . . Often has my mind hung with fondness and admiration over the crowded, yet clear and luminous, galaxies of imagery diffused through the works of Bishop Taylor."—Dr. Parr.

For other comparisons between Taylor, Barrow, and Hooker, see BARROW, ISAAC, D.D., (p. 132;) HOOKER, RICHARD, (p. 880.) Hazlitt (Lectures on the Dramat. Lit. of the Age of Elizabeth, Lect. VII.) draws a contrast, which the reader must not fail to peruse, between the styles of Jeremy Taylor and Sir Thomas Browne.

"When the name of Jeremy Taylor is no longer remembered with reverence," concludes Hazlitt, "genius will have become a mockery, and virtue an empty shade."

"The crowded, yet clear and luminous, galaxies of imagery diffused through the works of Bishop Taylor," are mentioned in glowing terms by Dr. Parr. It must, however, be admitted that his wealth of imagination is sometimes more conspicuous than his object of judgment. His style is distinguished by its richness, and is more fluent and unnumbered than that of his most eminent predecessors in English literature. His popularity is almost unimpaired."—DR. DAVID IRVING. Life of Taylor, in Scott's Serms. 7th ed., xxi., (1842), 126.

Endowed with a mind of prodigious fertility, which a vast erudition rendered more intellectual, he accumulates without selection whatever presents itself to his mind; his innumerable quotations, his multiplied reasonings, his prodigality of epithets and appositives, are poured along the interminable periods of his sentences, with a frequency of repetition, sometimes of the same phrases, which leaves us to suspect that he revised but little what he had very rapidly composed. Certain it is that, in his different works, he does not quite adhere to himself; and it would be more desirable to lay this on the partial views that haste and superfluity produce, than on a deliberate employment of what he knew to be insufficient reasoning. But I must not hedge; that Taylor's fairness does not seem his characteristic quality."—HALLAM: Lit. Hist. of Europe, II. 354, (q. r.) See, also, ibid.

"The little I have yet read, I am strongly inclined to think that Jeremy is the most completely eloquent writer in our language. There is a most manly and graceful ease and freedom in his composition, while a strong intellect is working powerfully through every paragraph, while all manner of beautiful imagery is as by felicitous accident."—JOHN FOSTER: Life and Serms., ed. 1855, i. 339. See, also, ibid.

"The most eloquent of divines! had I said of men, Cicero would forgive me, and Demosthenes not assent."—COLERIDGE.

"The writings of Plato and Bishop Taylor, and the Theoria Secunda of Bernardus, undeniable proofs that poetry of the highest kind can exist without metre, and even without the conventional qualities of a poem."—Coleridge: Biog. Lit., ch. 37.

"Jeremy Taylor was only twice 'the Poet' as affirmed, in a sacred poem, and in all his poetry, even the rhythm, may be compared with Tully's Natura Deorum."—HENRY CHABOT: Sermons, 1790, ch. 10, § 1.

"The same of modern sermons in the English language that had been considered as very eloquent. . . . For eloquence we must go back as high as the days of Barrow and Jeremy Taylor, and even there, while we are delighted with their fancy, we are in danger of being disgusted by a redundancy which abhors all designation, which compares till it perplexes, and illustrates till it confounds."—Rev. STANLEY SMITH: Works, ed. 1854, i. 10; Ann. Rev., 1855, 1856, 1857.

"Nor are the softness and the fancy, the endless variety and unexpected sallies, of Taylor, to be matched by other divines, any more than they are to be ventured upon by such as duly regard the severe taste which the solemnity of the occasion prescribes."—LORD BROWNE: Contrib. to Edin. Rev., 1856, i. 128.

The singularity of the opinion next to be quoted excites admiration at the boldness of the critic:

"With all his genius, learning, and industry, Jeremy Taylor never could be a poet, because he never went beyond himself,—beside himself, if you will. He has put the question beyond doubt; he tried verse; but his lines are like petrifications, guttering, and hard, and cold; formed by a slow but certain process in the laboratory of abstract thought; not, like flowers, springing spontaneously from a kindly soil, fresh and fragrant and blooming in open day. The erudite divine is always in his study. He never goes out to meditate in the field at eventide, as Lucretius did."—JAMES MONTEAGUE: Lects. on Genl. Lit., Pbel., &c., Lect. III.

Such a verdict ill agrees with this:

"Whether he describes the duties, or dangers, or hopes of man, or the mercy, power, and justice of the Most High; whether he exhorts or instructs his brethren, or offers up his supplications in their behalf to the common Father of all, his conceptions and his expressions belong to the loftiest and most sacred description of poetry, of which they only want—that they cannot be said to need—the name and the metrical arrangement."—BISHOP HENRICH: Life of Taylor.

Or this:

"Some of the old English prose-writers (who were not poets) are the best, and, at the same time, the most poetical, in the favourable sense. Among these we may reckon some of the old divines, and Jeremy Taylor at the head of them. There is a flush like the dawn over his writings, the sweetness of the rose, the freshness of the morning dew. There is a softness in his style proceeding from the tenderness of his heart; but his head is firm and his hand is free. His materials are as finely wrought up as they are original and attractive in themselves. Milton's prose style savours too much of poetry, and, as I have already hinted, of an imitation of the Latin. Dryden's is perfectly unexceptionable, and a model, in simplicity, strength, and perspicuity, for the subjects he treated of."—HAZLITT: Table-Talk, Essay XXIV.: On the Prose Style of Poets.

Or this:

"We will venture to assert that there is in any one of the prose folios of Jeremy Taylor more fine fancy and original imagery,—more brilliant conceptions and glowing expressions,—more new figures, and more applications of old figures,—more, in short, of the body and soul of poetry, than in all the odes and the epics that have since been produced in Europe."—LORD JEFFREY: Contrib. to Edin. Rev., 1853, 377; from Edin. Rev., Aug. 1811, 278.

"Jeremy Taylor," exclaims the author of Jon, "stands altogether alone among churchmen. Who has ever manifested any portion of that exquisite intermixture of a yearning love with a heavenly fancy which enabled him to embody and render palpable the holy charities of his religion in the loveliest and most delicate images? Who has ever so encrusted his subjects with candid words; or has seemed, like him, to take away the sting of death with 'rich conceit'; or has, like him, half-persuaded his hearers to believe that they heard the voice of pitying angels?"—Tulford's Miscell. Writings: from London Magazine.

To these enthusiastic admirers of Jeremy Taylor is to be added (on the authority of a letter to the author of this Dictionary) the name of a great master of our language, who has but recently "ceased from his labours."

"I should think any one would guess from his [De Quincey's] works what a great admiration he had for Shakespeare and Milton. I do not think that people would gather the same opinion as regards Jeremy Taylor; and yet I think he would have placed him beside those two great towers of strength."—Emily Jane De Quincey to S. Austin Allibone, Larned, Mar. 31, 1860.

19. Taylor's Motto. Et Habeb, et Cateo, et Curo: I have, I write, I care; a Poem. J. T. and H. G., 1821.

"This is certainly one of the most rude and caricatured of Taylor's numerous pieces. It was written in opposition to Wither's eulphary motto, I Hate Nut, I Want Nut, I Can't Nut, printed in 1688 and 1691. At the end is a curious list of brookes I have read of Poets, &c., 'Old Chaucer, Sidney, Spenser,

"The London Society having now completed their fac-simile reprint of the Works of John Taylor, completed in the folio of 1650, the Council are anxious to supplement it by a republication of his other pieces which have only appeared in a separate form. Many works have been attributed to him without sufficient grounds, and the continuing reprint will only include those which either bear his name or contain very strong internal evidence of having him as their author. As these, however, are very numerous, and some of them excessively rare, I have hoped that the possessors of copies will be the undertaking in which the Council are engaged, and will allow the use of them for the purpose of transcription, in order to make the collection as complete as possible. Every copy will be taken of any volume which may be interested to me for that purpose. I shall also be obliged by any additions which your correspondents may point out to the list of John Taylor's works given by Mr. Hazlitt in his Hand-Book, which appears to be the most complete and correct one yet published, but which is, as must naturally be supposed, capable of enlargement."—Jas Croxeter, Booth Street, Piccadilly, Manchester: Notes and Queries, 1868, I. 101

Taylor, John, of York, England. Account of his Labours, Exercises, Travels, &c., Lon., 1710, 12mo.

Taylor, John, LL.D., b. about 1703, at Shrewsbury, where his father was a barber chirurgicon, was educated at, and in 1730 became Fellow of, St. John's College, Cambridge: Librarian to the University, 1732; Registrar, 1734; Advocate in Doctors' Commons, 1741; LL.D., 1742; Chancellor of Lincoln, 1744, and some years later took holy orders; Rector of Lawford, Essex, 1751; Archdeacon of Ruckingham, 1768; Canon Residentiary of St. Paul's, 1757; &c. 1768. 1. Music Speech, July 6, 1780, Lon., 1780, 8vo. See No. 2. 2. Oratio, Jan. 26, 1780, 1780. This and No. 1 were republ. by John Nichols in Two Music Speeches at Cambridge, &c., by Roger

It is, in fact, a Grammar, Lexicon, and Concordance, founded on the Concordance of Buxtorf, all whose errors Dr. Taylor corrected. . . . The price of this Concordance is one shilling.

It is the only one of the last few years it is generally agreed to be the most complete and the most useful work of the kind, especially to the English scholar.—Orme's Publ.

Taylor, John, LL.D., Rector of Rowan, Leicestershire, Minister of St. Margaret's, Westminster, the schoolfellow and for many years the intimate friend of Dr. Samuel Johnson, was appointed Rector of Westminster July 11, 1746, and d. Feb. 19, 1788. After his death the Rev. Mr. Hayes published Sermons on Different subjects, left for publication by John Taylor, LL.D., &c., Lon. 1788, 89, 2 vols. 8vo, 2d ed. 1790, 2 vols. 8vo; 3d ed. 1799, 2 vols. 8vo; 4th ed., 1800, 2 vols. 8vo; 5th ed. 1812, 8vo. The 25th and last sermon was written by Dr. Johnson on the death of his wife, but we doubt not we have read them all carefully that Dr. Johnson is entitled to the credit of all of them.

"There is not a man in England who knows any thing of Dr. Johnson as a literary writer that will not instantly pronounce these sermons to be his."—Biog. of Johnson, 1794.

"The sermon is a proof that the sermons were Johnson's."—Croker, 1847. Review's B.M. 1848, ch. ix. See, also, Index.

Boswell also believed them to be Johnson's.

"Indeed," continues a Bishop, "Pratt says they are (some of them, at least) in his very last manner, and Taylor was no person capable of writing them than of making an epic poem."

They are the result of the mind's strength, the nervous power, the pointed in ray of Johnson's own works.—Critical Ac.

Taylor, Thomas, "The Platonist," b. in London May 13, 1758, was educated for three years at St. Paul's School, and subsequently studied the mathematics and classics (in which at a later day he instructed others under private teachers: obtained a junior clerkship in Messrs. Lubbock's banking-house, and afterwards received the appointment of Assistant Secretary to the Society for the Encouragement of Arts, Manufactures and Commerce, which post he held for several years during the last forty years of his life resided in a small house at Walworth, (partially supported by an income of £100 from his friend Mr. W. Meredith, which he enjoyed until his death,) industriously occupied in those classical translations which had been his delight from his youth. d. at Walworth, November 1, 1835. Some of his publications are anonymous.

Commentaries on the Philosophy of Plato, and a considerable Portion of such as are already published*, 1804, 6 vols. r. 4to. Printed at the expense of the Duke of Norfolk, who looked up nearly the whole edition in his house, where it remained until long after his decease. The publication price was £10 10s.; but the copies were sold off in 1848, and the price reduced to £5 5s.

"Thanks to the learning and industry of Messrs. Sydenham and Taylor, we have now the whole of the works of this wonderful philosopher brought within the reach of the English public, with a great variety of learned notes and instructive dissertations. The works of Plato may be properly considered the Scriptures of the ancient heathen world."—DR. ADAM CLARK.

This edition is critically reviewed in the Edinburgh Review for April, 1809, 187-211; and, whilst Sydenham's scholarship is commended, Taylor is castigated without mercy:

"Mr. Taylor has done it shockingly. His language is stiff and awkward, and untruth to a degree that has hardly any example even among those literal translations which have been provided for the use of schools. Nor is this the worst. Mr. Taylor has by no means given us a fair representation even of the meaning of Plato. He has not translated Plato; he has travestied him in the most cruel and abominable manner. He has not elucidated, but covered him over with impenetrable darkness. . . . Any competent scholar has but to open the book,—and if he compares one page with the original the chance is great that he will light upon more blunders than one. . . . We are quite satisfied that his general practice has been to interpret directly from the Latin translation, without so much as looking at the Greek; for the cases are so numerous in which we have found his translation an exact copy of the Latin, and in which an inspection of the Greek could hardly have failed to convince him he was wrong, that we have been unable to form any other conclusion. . . . We have already adduced abundant proof of Mr. Taylor's lamentable deficiency in every requisite for the performance of his arduous task."—Pp. 190, 201, 211.

To Plato's Works add, Plato and the other Companions of Socrates, by George Grote, 1865, 3 vols. 8vo; 2d ed., 1867. New editions of Grote's great History of Greece were published in 1863, 8 vols. 8vo, £5 12s., and 1870, 4 vols. 8vo, £2 8s.

21. The Pythagoric Sentences of Demophilus; printed with Mr. Wm. Bridgman's Translations, 1804, 8vo, and in No. 9. 22. Miscellanies in Prose and Verse, 1806, or 8vo; 2d ed., 1820, 12mo. 23. Collectanea, 1806, or 8vo; 50 copies privately printed. 24. The Works of Aristotle, Translated and Illustrated with Notes, &c., 1806-12, 10 vols. 4to, or, with No. 14, (which should accompany the 2d ed. of the Metaphysics, vol. ix., infra), 11 vols. r. 4to, (£57 6s.) viz.: vol. i., 1806; ii., iii., 1807; iv., 1808; v., 1809; vi., 1810; vii., viii., 1811; ix., 1812; x., Dissertation on the Philosophy of Aristotle, by Thomas Taylor, 1812. Of this translation, the only complete one in English, 50 sets were printed at the expense of William Meredith, (by whose aid several of Taylor's works were issued.) Of all the vols. save i. and iii. a few extra impressions were taken off: G. Watson Taylor's set brought £26 15s., and Ward's set (Pt. I, No. 280) £30 9s. Copies are in the Bodleian Library and London Institution. Of vol. ix. 25 copies, 2 l. p., fol., were taken off for presents.

The Rhetoric, Poetic, and Nicomachean Ethics (which compose vol. vii.) were also pub. 1818, 2 vols. 8vo. 25. The Elements of the True Arithmetic of Infinites, 1809, 4to. Also appended to vol. vi., No. 24. 26. The Emperor Julian's Arguments, taken from Cyril, with Extracts from his other Works relative to the Christians; trans. 1809, 8vo. 27. The Six Books of Proclus on the Theology of Plato, &c.; from the Greek, 1816, 2 vols. r. 4to, £5 10s.: 250 copies. 28. Theoretic Arithmetic, in Three Books; containing the Subtance of all that has been written on this Subject by Theon of Smyrna, Nicomachus, Iamblichus, and Boëthius, &c.; from the Greek, 1816, 8vo. 29. Select Works of Plotinus, &c.; from the Greek, with an Introd., 1817, 8vo. 30. Life of Pythagoras by Iamblichus; from the Greek, 1818, 8vo. 31. Commentaries of Proclus on the Timæus of Plato; from the Greek, 1820, 2 vols. r. 4to, £5 10s. 32. Iamblichus on the Mysteries of the Egyptians, Chaldeans, and Assyrians; from the Greek, 1821, 8vo. 33. The Metamorphosis, or Golden Ass, and Philosophical Works of Apuleius; from the Latin, 1822, 8vo; 1. p., r. 8vo. Some copies of the small-paper, and all the large-paper, copies have suppressed passages, generally placed at the end of the volume. 34. Political Pythagoric Fragments and Ethical Fragments of Hierocles; from the Greek, 1822, 8vo. 35. The Elements of a New Arithmetical Notation, and of a New Arithmetic of Infinites, &c., 1823, 8vo. 36. Select Works of Porphyry; from the Greek; with an Appendix by the Translator, 1823, 8vo; 50 on large thick paper. 37. The Fragments that remain of the Lost Writings of Proclus; from the Greek, 1825, p. 8vo: 250 copies. 38. Arguments of Celsus, Porphyry, and the Emperor Julian against the Christians; also Extracts from Diodorus Siculus, Josephus, and Tacitus, relating to the Jews, 1830, 12mo. Wm. Meredith, at whose expense this was printed, ordered all the copies to be burnt. 39. Ocellus Lucanus on the Nature of the Universe, Taurus on the Eternity of the World, Julius Farnius Maternus of the Thema Mundi, &c., and Select Theorems on the Perpetuity of Time, by Proclus; from the Greek, 1831, p. 8vo. 40. Proclus on Providence and Evil; from the Greek, 1833, p. 8vo: 250 copies; again, 1841, p. 8vo. 41. Plotinus on Suicide, with Extracts from Olympiodorus, and two Books on truly Existing Being, &c., with Notes from Porphyry and Proclus, 1834, 8vo.

He published the Abridgment of Edwards's History of the West Indies, 1794, 3 vols. 8vo. (see EDWARDS, BRYAN, M.P.), and contributed many papers to the Classical Journal, Nos. 32, 33, 34, 42, 43, 45, 47, 48, 51, 52, 55, 56, 57, and 58, and the European and Monthly Magazines. Of these fugitive pieces a complete collection of the Chaldean Oracles was republished by Mr. Cory. These and Mr. Taylor's other persevering labours in his chosen department of research failed to kindle the first spark of gratitude in the bosom of the "Literary Idler" of Blackwood's Magazine, who thus irreverently assails the Philosopher of Walworth:

"If I knew Valpy, I should certainly expostulate with him for allowing Taylor the Platonist to write in his journal. The man is an ass, in the first place; secondly, he knows nothing of the religion of which he is so great a fool as to profess himself a votary; and, thirdly, he knows less than nothing of the language about which he is continually writing."—June, 1826, 737: Note-Book of a Literary Idler, No. 1.

Mathias is as little disposed to be complimentary to our translator:

"Thomas Taylor, . . . the would-be restorer of unintelligible mysticism and superstitious pagan nonsense; in short, of what Iamblichus revealed to Eusebius."—Pursuits of Lit., Dec. III., No. 15.

De Quincey, having occasion to refer to William Taylor of Norwich, remarks, "Taylor, the Platonist, who was far more distinguished for absurdity, now equally illustrious for obscurity."—Philosophical Writers, i., (Sir James Mackintosh.)

The author of the obituary notice of Taylor in the London Athenæum tells us that

"Mr. Taylor was not so much a Platonist as a Neo-Platonist; he followed less the pure doctrines of the Academy than their extension by the school of Alexandria and the Sophists. . . . The compound of all Eastern and Western metaphysics preached by the later Platonists, patronized by the emperor Julian, and advocated by the Sophists, as a rival to Christianity, is really the Platonic system developed by Mr. Taylor. His admiration of these writers was unbounded; and his enthusiasm was not at all abated by finding himself alone in his worship."—1836, 374.

"We talked of English national character. I told him it was not creditable that no one in all the country knew any thing of Thomas Taylor the Platonist, whilst in every American library his translations are found. I said, 'If Plato's Republic were published in England, as a new book, to-day, do you think it would find any readers?' He confessed it would not: 'and yet,' he added, after a pause, with that complacency which never deserts a true-born Englishman, 'and yet we have embodied it all.'"—Emerson's Representative Men, Lon., 1860, 39. Taylor, William, b. at Norwich, 1765, d. March, 1836, for some years a merchant, and long known as a contributor of papers on foreign literature, &c. to the periodicals, (the Monthly, Critical, and Annual Reviews, old Athenaeum, &c.) preceded Spencer and Scott in introducing modern German poetry to English readers. 1. Nathan the Wise: a Dramatic Poem written originally in German, by G. E. Lessing. Privately printed, Norwich, 1791, 8vo, and Lon., 1791, 8vo; published Lon., 1805, 8vo, and in No. 4, (infra).

"The translation is from the pen of Mr. Taylor, of Norwich, whose admirable version of Locrine, and of the Epigonia in Taurus, have placed him at the head of all our translators from that language."—Lord Jeffrey: Edin. Rev., April, 1806, 164, See No. 2.

"The language of the translation is often tame, and abounds with low expressions and unauthorised words."—Lon. Month. Rev., 1806, i, 247.

Commended by Lon. Retrosp. Rev., x, (1824) 265. An English translation of Nathan the Wise, by Dr. Adolphus Reich, was published Lon., 1863, p. 8vo, (see Lon. Athen., 1863, i, 228;) and another, by Miss Ellen Frothingham, of Boston, with an Account of Lessing, and Essay on the Poem, by K. Fischer, was issued N. York, Dec. 1867, 16mo. 2. Ellenore, a Ballad originally written in German, by G. A. Bürger, 1798, 4to. Anon.

"This is the translation to which we some time ago alluded as being the earliest in point of time, of the various English versions of this fashionable ballad. We are persuaded that it is by no means so deficient inferior to the rest in point of poetical merit, and on some accounts is a more delicate piece will be assigned to it."—*Lon. Month. "William Taylor's translation of your ballad is published, and so inferior that I wonder we could tolerate it."—Miss J. A. Crampton to Walter Scott, 1798; Lockhart's Life of Scott, ch. vii.

"He [Mr. H. W. Longfellow] has given W. Taylor's rapid rendering of Bürger's wild ballad 'Locrine,' instead of the fine and bold imitation of it by Walter Scott."—Francis Bowen: N. Amer. Rev., July, 1843, 206; review of Longfellow's Poets and Poetry of Europe.

"The very fine translation by Mr. Taylor."—G. P. Marsh: Lects. on the Eng. Language, 1859, Lect. XXV. See, also, Lock. XXVI.

3. English Synonyms Discriminated, 1813, 12mo, pp. 294.

"The author promised in his preface that, "if invited by the public patronage, he should occasionally continue the task of definition."

"We are fully satisfied of his competency to the task."—Lon. Month. Rev., Nov. 1816, 317. See, also, March, 1819, 336.

Also reviewed (with Crabb's Synonymes, &c.) in Lon. Quar. Rev., Mar. 1827, (xxxv.) 403-410.

"The obvious faults of the work are the fancifulness of much in it, and its utter incompleteness."—Lon. Quar. Rev., Dec. 1843, 97, (q. v.)

New edition, Revised and Augmented with Materials by the Author, not before published; to which are appended a Selection from his various Essays on Philological Subjects, by J. W. Robberds, Esq. Announced in 1848, but did not appear. New edits. of the Synonyms only were pub. 1850, 12mo, 1856, 12mo. 4. Historic Survey of German Poetry, interspersed with various Translations, 1828-30, 3 vols. 8vo. This is chiefly a collection of his previously published translations, many of which first appeared in periodicals. Reviewed by Thomas Carlyle in Edin. Rev., Mar. 1831, 151-180; repub. in Carlyle's Crit. and Miscell. Essays. For two years (1802-4) Taylor edited the Norwich Iris, the organ of his political party. It was not successful. See, also, SAYES, FRANK, M.D., No. 6. After his death appeared: Memoir of the Life and Writings of the Late William Taylor, of Norwich, containing his Correspondence of many Years with the Late Robert Southey, Esq., and Original Letters from Sir Walter Scott, and other Eminent Literary Men; Compiled and Edited by J. Taylor's written prose style is very peculiar, and not readily to be mistaken: one of his old friends remarks, "It is easy to trace, or rather it is impossible to overlook, him. . . . It is true that he does not speak [write] . . . any other language but the Taylorian; but I am so fond of his vigour and originality, that for his sake I have studied and learned his language. As the Hebrew is studied for one book, so is the Taylorian by me for one author."—SIR JAMES MACKINTOSH: Life, chaps. v. and viii.

Temple, Sir William, M.P., son of Sir John Temple, (supra) and grandson of the preceding, and one of the most eminent of English statesmen and diplomatists, was b. at Blackfriars, London, 1628, and educated at Emmanuel College, Cambridge; after performing many important political services, the negotiation of the Triple Alliance, of the peace between England and Holland, the marriage between Lady Mary and the Prince of Orange, &c.—retired to his seat at Moor Park, Surrey, (from which King William vainly endeavoured to tempt him), in 1681, and d. there, Jan. 27, 1699.

of Grief; Different Conditions of Life and Fortune; Heads of an Essay on Conversation; Poems and Translations. Vol. IV, Letters to the King, the Prince of Orange, &c.; Index. To these four volumes must be added (for they contain some heretofore unpublished Essays and Correspondence) Memoirs of the Life, Works and Correspondence of Sir William Temple, by the Rt.
Hon. Thomas Peregrine Courtenay, M.P., 1836, 2 vols.

SIR WILLIAM TEMPLE AS AN AUTHOR.

"Of all the considerable writers of this age, Sir William Temple is almost the only one that kept himself altogether unperturbed by that inundation of vice and licentiousness which overwhelmed the nation. The style of this author, although extremely negligent, and even infected with foreign idioms, is agreeable and interesting. That mixture of vanity which appears in his works is rather a recommendation to them. Any man of letters enter into acquaintance with the character of the author, full of honour and humanity, and fancy that we are engaged, not in the perusal of a book, but in conversation with a companion."— Hume: Hist. of Eng., ch. lxix.

"Sir William Temple was the first writer who gave cadence to English prose. Before his time they were careless of arrangement, and did not mind whether a sentence ended with an important word or an insignificant word, or with what part of speech it was concluded."—Dr. Johnson, in Diction., ch. lxix.

If the Doctor had said "one of the first," instead of "the first," he would have been correct.

"He [Johnson] once told me [Boswell] that he had formed his style upon that of Sir William Temple, and upon [Mabius].

Chambers's Proposal for his Dictionary."—Boswell's Johnson, ch.
ix. See, also, Malone's note, ch. lxix.

"Next to Dryden, the second place among the polite writers of the period from the Restoration to the end of the century has commonly been given to Sir William Temple. His Maxims, in which principally this praise belongs, are not recommended by more erudition than a retired statesman might acquire with no great expense of time, nor by much originality of reflection.
But, if Temple has not profound knowledge, he turns all he possesses well to account; if his thoughts are not very striking, they are commonly just. He has less eloquence than Boling-broke, but is also free from his restlessness and ostentation.
Much also which now appears superficial in Temple's historical surveys was far less familiar in his age: he has the merit of a comprehensive and a candid mind. His style, to which we should particularly refer, will be found in comparison with his contemporaries highly polished, and sustained with more equality than they preserve, remote from any thing either pedantic or humble. The periods are studiously rhythmical; yet they want the variety and peculiar charm that we admire in those of Dryden."—HALLAM: Lit. Hist. of Europe, 4th ed., 1854, iii. 558.

"Swift represents him as having brought English style to perfection. Hume, I think, mentions him; but of late he is not often spoken of as one of the reformers of our style: this, however, he certainly was. The structure of his style is perfectly modern; and I have not marked above half a dozen words that are become obsolete. He has, indeed, several Gallicisms, but they are chiefly in letters written in Flanders and Holland, when he was every day speaking French."—SIR JAMES MACKIN-TOSH: Life, ii. ch. iii.

"Milton's prose works are exceedingly stiff and pedantic, and Sir William's as remarkably easy and graceful; but he should have attended more to the minutie of names and dates."—DR.
RICHARD FARMER: Letter in the Study of English History.

"Temple is a very sensible writer, and draws more from his own stock of observation and reflection than is usual with the writers of the present day. . . . Temple, whatever topic he treats, always entertains; he has an easy regular stream of good sense, which never overflows, or fails, or stagnates."—Green's History of a Lover of Lill, 1810, 4to, 1. 31.

"All is easy and flowing in him; he is exceedingly harmonious; smoothness, and what may be called amenity, are the distinguishing characters of his manner, relaxing sometimes, as if such a manner naturally will do, into a prolix and tedious style.
No writer whatever has stamped upon his style a more lively impression of his own character. . . . He may be classed as standing in the middle between a negligent simplicity and the highest degree of ornament which this character of style admits."
—DR. BLAIR: Rhet. and Belles-Lett., Lect. XIX. See, also, Lect. X.

"Sir William Temple was the D'Ossat of England; but in the views and the style of his Observations, his Miscellaneous Works, and his Memoirs, he is far inferior to our diplomatist."—CHA-TEAUBRIAND: Sketches of Eng. Lit., ii. 195.

"He had gradually formed a style singularly lucid and melodious, superficially deformed, indeed, by Gallicisms and Hispani-cisms, picked up in travel or in negotiation, but at the bottom pure English, which generally flowed along with careless simplicity, but occasionally rose even into Occidental magnificence."
—LORD MACAULAY: Edin. Rev., Oct. 1838, 115: Life and Writings of Sir William Temple: repub. in his Essays.

"It is an ordinary criticism that my Lord Shaftesbury and Sir William Temple are models of the genteel style in writing.
We should prefer saying—of the lordly and the gentlemanly.
Nothing can be more unlike than the inflated finical rhapsodies of Shaftesbury and the plain natural chat of Temple. The man of rank is discernible in both writers; but in the one it is only insinuated gracefully; in the other it stands out offensively. The peer seems to have written with his coronet on and his earl's mantle before him; the commoner, in his elbow-chair and andress. What can be more pleasant than the way in which the retired statesman peeps out in his essays, penned by the latter in his delightful retreat at Sherborne? They are sent of Nimwegen and the Hague. Scarcely an authority is quoted under an ambassador."—CHARLES LAMB: The Perfect Style of Writing: Lamb's Works.

Of Sir William's unfortunate Essay upon Ancient and Modern Learning, already noticed by us, (BENTLEY, RICHARD, p. 170, supra,) Lord Macaulay remarks that

"It now seems strange that even the eminent public services, the deserved popularity, and the graceful style of Temple should have saved so silly a performance from universal contempt. Of the books which he most vehemently eulogized, his eulogies proved that he knew nothing. In fact, he could not read a line of the language in which they were written."—Life of Francis Atterbury, in Encyc. Brit., 8th ed., iv., (1854) republished in his bridge. Sermons preached to the British Congregation at Florence, Lon., 1844, 8vo.

Tennant, Smithson, an eminent chemist, b. at Selby, Yorkshire, Nov. 30, 1761, killed by a fall from his horse, near Boulogne, Feb. 22, 1815, contributed eight papers to Phil. Trans., 1791-1814, and one paper to Trans. Geol. Soc., 1811. See Thomson's Ann. of Phil., vi. 86, (by Wislaw); Encyc. Brit., 7th ed., xxi. 170, (Dr. Thomas Young, and in his Works, vol. iii.)

Tennant, William, LL.D., one of her Majesty's Chaplains in India. 1. Indian Recreations: Consisting chiefly of Strictures on the Domestic and Rural Economy of the Mahomedans and Hindoos, Edin., 1803, 2 vols. 8vo; 2d ed., with Additions, 1804, 2 vols. 8vo; vol. iii., 1804, 8vo.

"Entertaining and valuable."—Crit. Rev.

"Contains a great deal of curious and important matter."—Lon. Lit. Jour.

"Expressed in a very disagreeable style, and arranged without the smallest regard to the connection of the different subjects."—Edin. Rev., iv. 303-320.

It was also reviewed by John Foster in Eclat. Rev., Mar. 1810: repub. in Fosteriana, 1858, 72. 2. Thoughts on the Effects of the British Government on the State of India, 1807, 8vo.

Tennant, William, LL.D., a poet, and one of the most eminent of modern linguists, was b. in Anstruther, Eastang, county of Fife, Scotland, May 13, 1784: entered the University of St. Andrew's, 1794, pursued his collegiate studies for two years, and subsequently became a clerk to his brother, a corn-factor, first at Glasgow, and afterwards at Anstruther-Easter; schoolmaster at Dunino, 1812-16, and at Lasswade, 1816-19; teacher of Oriental and Classical Languages at the Academy of Dollar, Clackmannanshire, 1819-34; Professor of Oriental Languages at St. Mary's College, St. Andrew's, 1834, (he also filled the Hebrew chair at Edinburgh College,) until his death, Oct. 15, 1848. 1. The Anster Concert, Cupar, 1811, pp. 12. This purports to be by W. Crookleg,—a name suggested by his lameness, which fogbled him to use crutches all his life. It is in the Scottish dialect. 2. Anster Fair; a Poem, in Six Cantos, Anstruther, 1812. Anon. 2d ed., with other Poems, Edin., 1814, 8vo, pp. 255; Balt., 1815, 12mo; 4th ed., 1820, pp. 8vo; again, 1821, pp. 8vo; 1838, 12mo; 1849, pp. 8vo, (Chambers's People's ed.) The first edition was neglected for a year, when A. F. Tytler (Lord Woodhouselee) was struck with its merits, and requested of the publisher the name of the author. The second edition was favourably reviewed by Lord Jeffrey in Edin. Rev., Nov. 1814, 174-175. Anster Fair is written in the ottava rima of the Italians, much neglected by English poets since Fairfax's translation of Jerusalem Delivered, in which it was introduced to English readers.

"William Tennant, in his very original poem of 'Anster Fair,' gave Fife and Hyon more than a hint for 'Whistle-craft' and 'Beppu'; nor is it unjust to say that the imitators have not all equalled the life, the naïveté, the ludicrous dashed with the solemn, and the witty with both, which characterize the poem of Dollar."—ALLAN CUNNINGHAM: Biog. and Crit. Hist. of the Lit. of the Last Fifty Years.

"Tennant's first was, beyond all comparison, also his best poem."—D. M. Morn: Sketches of the Poet. Lit., &c., ed. 1856, pp. 108 (q. v.)

3. Papistry Storm'd; or, The Dingin Down of the Cathedral, (of St. Andrew's, at the commencement of the Reformation in Scotland,) pp. 8vo. This was commended by Lon. Rev., Lon. Lit. Chron., and Lon. Lit. Gaz. but attracted little attention from the public. 4. The Anno of Fife; a Poem, in Six Cantos, 1822, 8vo, pp. 285. A failure; and therefore the remainder of the poem was not published. Specimens of the first six cantos will be found in Lon. Lit. Gaz., 1822, 51. See Blackw. Mag., March, 1822, 366. 5. Cardinal Beaton; a Drama, in Five Acts, 1823, 8vo. Another failure. See extracts and reviews in Blackw. Mag., xiv. 421, and Lon. Lit. Gaz., 1823, 321. 6. John Balliol; a Historical Drama, in Five Acts, 1825, 8vo. Another failure.

"It is ill constructed, feeble, unpoetical, blurred with a multitude of blunders, and altogether unworthy of the pen to which we are indebted for the more happy poem of Anster Fair."—Lon. Lit. Gaz., 1825, 177.

7. Syriac and Chaldean Grammar, 1840. 8. Hobrew Dramas: Founded on Incidents of Bible History, 1845, pp. 8vo. Three dramas.

Tennyson, Alfred, D.C.L., the greatest of living poets, (1870,) was b. 1810, at Somersby, Lincolnshire, in which parish the Rev. Dr. George Clayton Tennyson (a descendant of the ancient and noble family of Eyecourt, now represented by the poet's uncle, the Rt. Hon. Charles Tennyson D'Eyncourt, M.P.) was Rector. Dr. Tennyson's three eldest sons, Frederick, Charles, and Alfred, were all educated at Trinity College, Cambridge, and pupils of the Rev. Dr. Whewell, afterwards Master, then one of the tutors, of that famous seat of learning, which has fitted so many disciples for eminence in scientific lore and literary research. In 1828, Frederick Tennyson took the medal for a Greek poem, recited at the commencement of that year; in 1829 Alfred gained the Chancellor's medal for his English prize poem (consisting of about 250 lines) of Timbuctoo; also published in 1829; in 1827 Alfred and Charles had published without their names, a small volume, entitled Poems by Two Brothers, (Stimpkin, 12mo, 5s.: or 8vo, 7s.) long liber variorum. Charles's portion of this collection was preferred by Coleridge to that of Alfred; and in his account of his second visit (in 1848) to Wordsworth, Mr. R. W. Emerson tells us, "Tennyson he [Wordsworth] thinks a right poetic genius, though with some affection. He had thought an older brother of Tennyson at first the better poet, but must now reckon Alfred the true one."—English Traits, Lond., 1857, 166. See Tennyson, Charles.

"I saw Tennyson in London several times. He is decidedly the first of our living poets, and I hope will give the world still better things. You will be pleased to hear that he expressed in the strongest terms, his gratitude to my writing."—Wordsworth to Prof. Henry Reed, 1845.

Since this joint venture, Alfred (who succeeded Wordsworth as Poet-Laureate, Nov. 21, 1850, and received the degree of D.C.L. from Oxford in 1855) has given to the world the following volumes.

1. Poems, chiefly Lyric, Lon., 1830, fp. 8vo.

"Mr. Tennyson has made some very touching and some very animating melodies; he is master of musical combinations; his songs set themselves, and generate their own tunes, as all song do which are good for any thing."—Westm. Rev., xiv. 210.

"We are extremely pleased with Mr. Tennyson. . . . Some of his scattered thoughts are eminently beautiful."—Lon. Atlas, June 27, 1830.

The volume was commented on by Professor Wilson in Blackwood's Magazine, May, 1832, (xxxi.) 730-74, (repub. in Wilson's Works, vi. 109-152, 1856,) with both praise and censure. In the Notes Ambrosianæ for the preceding February, Wilson remarks,

"He has a fine ear for melody, and harmony too—and rich glimpses of imagination. He has genius. . . . I admit Alfred, and hope—nay, trust—that one day he will prove himself a poet. If he do not—then am I no prophet."—xxxi. 277. See also, Feb. 1836, (xxxix.) 265.

2. Poems, 1832, (some 1833,) fp. 8vo, pp. 163. Consisting partly of reprints with alterations, partly of new pieces.

"I lately have been reading some of Alfred Tennyson's second volume, and with profound admiration of his truly lyric and idyllic genius. There seems to me to have been more epic power in Scott, that fiery, beautiful meteor; but they are two most true and great poets."—JOHN BRYAN: Letters.

"He has lyrical ease and vigour, and is looked upon by sundry critics as the chief living hope of the Muse."—ALLAN CUNNINGHAM: Biog. and Crit. Hist., 1843.

Reviewed with great severity in Lon. Quar. Rev., xlii. 81-96, and with mingled praise and censure in Lon. Athen., 1832, 770, and Lon. Lit. Gaz., 1832, 772. Poems, 1842, 2 vols. 12mo; 17th ed., 1865, fp. 8vo; Boston (Ticknor & Fields) edit.: 1842, 2 vols. 16mo. Blue and Gold, complete, 1856, 32mo; same, with Idyll of the King, Jan. 1861, 2 vols. 30s; Cabinet, (uniform with Pickering's Aldine Brit. Poets,) Sept. 1862, 2 vols. 16mo. Tauchnitz of Leipzig publishes Tennyson's poems in 4 vols., in his Copyright Collection of British Authors.

"The first of these two volumes consists of republished poems and may be regarded, we presume, as that Mr. Tennyson wished to preserve of his former editions. He has sifted most cases his earlier harvest, and kept the better grain. There are some additions of verses and stanzas here and there, many minute changes, and also beneficial shortenings and condensations. The second volume, however, is on the whole advanced in merit beyond the first. There is more clearness, solidity, and certainty of mind visible in it throughout; a peculiarly some of the blank-verse poems—a style almost untempted in the earlier series—have a quiet completeness and depth, a sweetness arising from the happy balance of thought, feeling, and expression, that ranks them among the richest of our recent literature."—Lon. Quar. Rev., Sept. 1842, (lxx.) 309.

"Powers are displayed in these volumes, adequate, if we do not deceive ourselves, to the production of a great work; at least, we should find it difficult to say which of the requisite powers is wanting. But they are displayed in fragments and snatches, having no connection, and therefore deriving no light or fresh interest the one from the other. By this their effect or value is incalculably diminished."—Edin. Rev., April, 1843, (lxxvii.) 300.

"Two volumes of poems, partly old ones revised and partly new, which placed him at once at the head of contemporary poetry in England, and have kept him there ever since."—Edin. Rev., Oct. 1855, (civ.) art. vii.

3. The Princess: a Medley, Lon., 1847, fp. 8vo; Bost., 1848, 16mo; 23th ed., Lon., 1865, fp. 8vo.

"This poem, though full of meanings of abiding value, is certainly a brilliant and poetic jeu d'esprit upon the noted about 'woman's rights,' which even now ceases to make itself heard anywhere—but in the language of exploded European absurdities beyond the Atlantic. . . . Mr. Tennyson has proved himself to be possessed of artistic qualities which put it out of the question that he should be content to be thoroughly satisfied with this performance."—Westm. Rev., Oct. 1847, (civ.) art. vii.

"The abundant grace and exquisite beauty which meet the superficial eye constitute but its external charm. Studying his work with that attention which the labours of a true poet should always command, we soon discover that, while fantastic in its subject, it is eminently human in sentiment, and that the human gradually rises higher and higher into the moral."—Edin. Rev., Oct. 1848, (xc.) 308, (same in Eccl. Mag., xix. 66).

"The Princess is not a drama, nor is it a fairy-tale in verse, but a fantastic metrical romance. . . . The second title of this lively performance points out its principal object: it is a medley, and, we must think, a somewhat incongruous one. The fearless intermixture of the modes and phases of all ages, past and present, is a resource better fitted for a brief jeu d'esprit than for a work of this compass; but that is not the word. The main web of the tale is a goosander fabric, and can be knitted the heavy embroidery raised upon it: the low key at which it is pitched indisposes the mind for the higher strains to which the piece changes. . . . The faults of the poem are soon numbered and ticketed: it is more difficult to do justice to its beauties."—Lon. Quar. Rev., Dec. 1847, (lxxxi.) 439, 445, 451.

"However it grew, it is a charming melody; and that supposed anachronism which runs throughout, bleeding new and old, new theory and old romance, leads to it a perpetual pliancy."—Blackw. Mag., April, 1849, (lxv.) 463.

"Taken as a whole, we must pronounce it a beautiful poem, the production of a truly poetical mind, and showing the most indisputable marks of a high artistic power superintending the creation and arrangement and classification of the whole."—Lon. Gent. Mag., 1848, l. 131.

"Regarding 'The Princess,' it is no marvel that such a contrariety of opinion has been expressed by seemingly competent judges. Its beauties and faults are so inextricably interwoven, and the latter are so glaring and many,—nay, often apparently so wilful,—that, as a sincere admirer of the genius of Tennyson I could almost wish the poem had remained unwritten. I admit the excellence of particular passages; but it has neither general harmony of design nor sustained merit of execution."—D. M. MORRIS: Sketches of the Poet. Lit., 3d ed., 1856, 316.

5. In Memoriam, May, 1850, fp. 8vo; Bost., 1850, 16mo; 3d ed., Lon., Aug. 1850, fp. 8vo; 4th ed., Jan. 1851, fp. 8vo; 17th ed., 1865, fp. 8vo; on tinted paper, with a Biographical Sketch and vignette of A. H. Hallam, and a steel portrait of Tennyson, Bost., (Ticknor & Fields,—the only authorized publishers in America of Tennyson's works.) Nov. 1861, 8vo. See HALLAM, ARTHUR HENRY,—whose Remains, with the Memoir, pp. 363, privately printed in 1834, (100 copies,) and reprinted in 1853, were first published Lon., 1863, fp. 8vo, Bost., 1863, 16mo; see Lon. Reader, 1863, i. 81; Lon. Athen., 1859, i. 151; 1863, i. 85; Atlantic Mon., Dec. 1860, Arthur Henry Hallam, by John Brown, M.D., &c. Extracted from Horns Subacive, Edin., 1862, fp. 8vo.

In Memoriam appeared without a name, (see Lon. Gent. Mag., 1850, ii. 59, Lon. Athen., 1850, 629;) nor was a name needed.

"Although in some few places this work wants that perfect polish which distinguishes the author's lesser poems, upon the whole it is not only the best specimen of poetical skill which Mr. Tennyson has produced, but it surpasses, in this respect, all poems of equal magnitude written during the past century."—Edin. Rev., Oct. 1855, (lxx.) art. vii.

The same periodical also asserts, in another place, that

"In Memoriam is the most exquisite creation by any man of genius during the last forty years."

"In Memoriam" comes more intimately home to English sympathies than "Lycidas" or "Adonais," and may be pointed to, perhaps, as the one special monody to which beauty of form and feeling have given an universal currency."—Lon. Athen., 1863, i. 85.

"We have at last received Maud, and we have risen from the personal dispirited and sorrowful. It is not a light thing nor trivial annoyance to a sincere lover of literature to have it forced upon his conviction that the man who has unquestionably occupied for years the first place among the living English poets is losing ground with each successive effort."—*Westm. "We have 'Maud' scarcely more than a residuum of Alfred Tennyson; the wide sweeping intellect, the mild philosophy, the healthy pathos, the wondrous melody, have almost all vanished, and left little more than a narrow scorn which piques itself on its scorn of sorrow, and a passion which clothes itself in exaggerated competence."—Westm. Rev., Oct. 1856; (Chambers, 1856)

We now turn with diminished pleasure from 'In Memoriam' to Tennyson's recently published volume of 'Maud, and other poems,' for the qualities we appreciate most highly in the former are precisely those which are most wanting in the latter."

 "Even in the wildest rhapsodies of 'The Princess' Mr. Tennyson has never been so careless, visionary, and unreal as in this poetical treatment of a plain, popular, and literal theme. 'Maud' is an allusion of the War. . . Little more is to be said in the way of criticism. . . and that little we add with great reluctance. This volume is not worthy of its author."—*Lon. IX. The Idylls of the King: Sixteen Illustrations, drawn and etched by Amy Butts, 1862, r. 4to, (Day & Son.)

Nor should we omit to include among the illustrations of Tennyson's poems the picture of The Sleeping Beauty, from The May Dream, painted by Wight, of Boston, Dec. 1860, and the statuette of The Lotus Eater, by Miss Emma Stephens, modelled at Rome, and exhibited at Boston, March, 1861. Woolmer's marble bust of the poet (see Lon. Critic, 1857) was purchased by the fellows of Trinity College, Cambridge, and stands in the vestibule of their library. A portrait of Tennyson, in life, was issued separately in Lon., Nov. 1861.

We had designed to close this article with an array of critical opinions on Tennyson's characteristics as a poet from eminent authorities on both sides of the water, but we have already occupied as much space as we can well afford. A few lines, however, must find a place.

Two prominent American critics, both of whom recorded their verdicts (the first in 1844, and the last before 1849) prior to the appearance of In Memoriam, differed very greatly in their estimate of Tennyson's poetical genius:

"I am not sure that Tennyson is not the greatest of poets. The uncertainty attending the public conception of the term 'poet' alone prevents me from demonstrating that so do. Other bards produce effects which are now and then, otherwise produced than by what we call poems; but Tennyson an effect which only a poem does. His alone are idyllic poems."—Emory A. Poe: Literary & Marginalia, xciv.

"The peculiarities of his style have attracted attention, and his writings have enough intrinsic merit, probably, to secure him a permanent place in the third or fourth rank of English contemporary poets."—Dr. R. W. Griswold: Poets and Poetry of England.

But Dr. Griswold lived long enough to write,
 "Of the living poets of England, Tennyson at this time occupies the highest rank; and he is destined to a wide and high regard."

"He has opened a new vein in English poetry, and shown that real genius, even in the most advanced stages of society, can strike a fresh chord, and, departing from the hackneyed ways of imitation, charm the world by the conceptions of original thought. His imagination, wild and dramatic as the dreams of fancy, wanders at will, not over the real so much as the ideal world. The grottoes of the sea, the caves of the mermaid, the realms of heaven, are alternately the scenes of his song. His versification, wild as the song of the elfin king, is broken and irregular, but often inexpressibly charming. Sometimes, however, this tendency leads him into conceit: in the endeavour to be original, he becomes fantastic. There is a freshness and originality, however, about his conceptions, which contrast strangely with the practical and interested views which influenced the age in which he lived, and contributed not a little to their deserved success. They were felt to be the more charming because they were so much at variance with the prevailing ideas around him, and reposed those Mountains of romance which nature had planted in every generous bosom, but which are so often closed by the cares, the anxieties, and the rivalry of the world."—SIR ARTHUR ALBION: Hist. of Europe, 1616-1802, (1853) ch. v. See, also, Albion's Essays, Edin., 1850, II. 621.

"Now, the particular power by which Mr. Tennyson surpasses all recent English poets is precisely that of sustained perfection of style. Others have equalled or excelled him in other respects, but we look in vain among his modern rivals for any who can compete with him in the power of saying beautifully the thing he has to say; and this, not only in single sentences and passages, but for page after page and poem after poem, without flagging and apparently without effort."—Edin. Rev., July, 1850.

"Tennyson is endowed precisely in points where Wordsworth wanted. There is no finer ear, nor more command of the key of language. Colour like the dawn flows over the horizon from his pencil, in waves so rich that we do not miss the central form. Through all his refinements, too, he has reached the public—certificate of good sense and general power, since he who aspires to be the English poet must be as large as London,—not in the same kind as London, but in his own kind. But he wants subject, and climbs no mount of vision to bring its secrets to the people. He contents himself with describing the Englishman as he is, and proposes no better. There are all degrees of country, and we must be thankful for every beautiful talent; but it is only a first success when the ear is gained. The best of his poetry has been to show how low and uninspired was the current style, and that only once or twice they have attempted to reach the heights."—RALPH WALDO EMERSON: English Traits, Lond., 1857, 141-145.

"M. Tennyson excelle dans la peinture des sentiments tendres et délicats; sa sensibilité naturelle se traduit en beaux vers élégants, pleins, harmonieux; le caractère religieux et moral de son poëme a beaucoup contribué à sa popularité. Avec plus d'imagination et de souci de la forme, il continuë modestement l'école idéologique des latins. On l'a surnommé le plus classique des romantiques anglais."—Dict. Univ. des Contemporains, par G. Vapereau, Paris, 1856, 1049.

Like all great and many small poets, Tennyson has his host of imitators:

"The great model of most verse-writers in our time is the Laureate. We wrong many of them, however, to use the word 'model,' for it is incentive enough if they read him and admire his poetry. They sit down forthwith to do something in that style. His muse and his music are alike inimitable. . . . Shakespeare did not tyrannize over the Elizabethans half so much as Tennyson does over the young mind of the present. . . . The art of imitating Tennyson, then, is the fatal facility of our time. . . . No blame can be awarded to the singer for introducing so many mocking-birds. It is something to be grateful for, that his song is so pure, his influence so free from harm. . . . It is something to rejoice over, that he has taken the place of Byron with our verse-writers. It is curious to notice how the imitations rise in the scale of excellence as the Laureate's own works rise towards perfection."—Lon. Athn., 1861, II. 241.

"Tennyson's diction and melody are in perfect harmony with his imaginative faculty. To describe his command of language by any ordinary terms expressive of fluency or force would be to convey an idea both inadequate and erroneous. It is not only that he knows every word in the language suited to express every idea: he can select with the ease of magic the word that is of all others the best for his purpose. Nor is it that he can at once summon to his aid the best word the language affords with an art which Shakespeare never seemed to apply, though in our day it is apt to be counted mere Germanism and pronounced contrary to the genius of the language; he combines old words into new epithets; he daintily mingles old colours to bring out new tints that never were on sea or shore. His word gleams like pearls and opals, like rubies and emeralds. . . . Such a poet cannot soon be popular with the million; but as the last and most exquisite culture of educated minds, as the ultimate sublimation of thought and beauty, as the most refined expression of the most refined civilization that ever dawned upon the world, his works must continue to exercise a mighty influence upon the leading intellects of those nations which lead the world."—BATMAN: Essays in Criticism: First Series.

In the (London) Reader of Jan. 31, 1863, we read,

"There is good news in the world of literature. Mr. Tennyson's new poems, 'Bardides' and 'Enoch the Fisherman,' are complete. The latter is a dramatic subject, worked out in powerful and even, it is said, harrowing detail."

We are now enabled to supplement the above, as follows: 9. Enoch Arden, and other Poems, Lon., Moxon, 1864, fp. 8vo; last ed., Strahan, 1869, fp. 8vo. It was in 1865 translated into German, (said to be good,) and into French, (said to be bad;) and in 1867 Professor Selwyn published Enoch Arden, Poema Tennysonianum, Latine Redditum, 4to, Moxon. It was dramatized at the Boston Theatre, Jan. 30, 1865. See reviews of Enoch Arden in N. Brit. Rev., Aug. 1864; Westm. Rev., Oct. 1864; Blackw. Mag., Nov. 1864; Macmillan's Mag., 1864; Lon. Reader, 1864, II. 186, 328, 354, 543, 768; Lon. Quar. Rev., No. cccxvii., Jan. 1866; (new) Lon. Quar. Rev., No. xlv., art. vi.

10. The Holy Grail, and other Poems, Lon., Strahan, Dec. 15, 1869, fp. 8vo, 40,000 ordered in advance: Boston, Fields, Osgood & Co., Dec. 1869, 16mo, three editions. In same vol. with first, The Idylls of the King, Complete, Lon., Strahan, Jan. 1870, fp. 8vo. Arranged in the order in which the author wishes them to be read, viz.: I. The Coming of Arthur; II. Goriant and Enid; III. Merlin and Vivien; IV. Lancelot and Elaine; V. The Holy Grail; VI. Pelleas and Ettarre; VII. Guinevere; VIII. The Passing of Arthur.

"The whole may now be pronounced, we are not afraid to say, a poem unequalled in its great, finished, and happy design, since the time of Milton. Its brilliancy of execution often fades; its wings drop earthward here and there; but in its harmonious and fulfilled design, in its fortunate and faultless scheme and arrangement, it has no equal since 'Paradise Lost.'"—Lon. Times, Jan. 1870.

"Our judgment would be held at fault if we were to assert that 'The Holy Grail' is in every respect up to the high standard of the 'Idylls of the King.' Good Homer never made, though such weakness has been assigned to him on authority from which one does not assent save reluctantly,—but he is not always equally exciting."—Lon. Athen., Dec. 1869.

See, also, Lon. Quar. Rev., No. cclv., Jan. 1870; a. 1. The Legends of King Arthur and his Knights of the Round Table, Compiled and Arranged by J. T. K., 1861, cr. 8vo, 4th ed., 1870; MALORY, SIR THOMAS; WESTWOOD, THOMAS; WRIGHT, THOMAS, No. 58. It is a singular coincidence that just at the time of the publication of Tennyson's Holy Grail the Rev. W. W. Skeat discovered in the Vernon MS. in the Bodleian Library a fragment of 800 lines of an early history, in alliterative verse, of The Holy Grail. It is without beginning or end, but it describes chiefly the wondrous shield prepared by Ewalashor Mordreins (Slow-of-Belief) for his descendant Sir Galahad. Its position in the romance is ascertained by reference to Lancelot's translation of Robert of Borron's History of the Holy Grail, edited by J. F. Fournival, 1861-63, 2 vols. 4to, (Roxburghe Club.) The newly-discovered fragment is to be published by the Early English Text Society.

Septimus Tennyson, a brother of Alfred, and also a poet, died at Cheltenham, England Sept 7 1866. "Our voice goes entirely with the pulchre in pronouncing Mr. Tennyson the first poet of our time" — Lon Times, Jan 11, 1866. This is very faint praise.

A new song by Mrs Alfred Tennyson, the Laureate's wife, entitled The Alma River, was published and set to music by the author in 1864. In 1866 Mr Tennyson left Farrington House, in the Isle of Wight, and bought a new home in the vicinity of Petersfield, Hampshire, one of the most beautiful of the southern counties of England.

Tennyson, Charles, brother of the preceding, and already noticed as joint-author with him of a volume of Poems published in 1829, in 1835 became Vicar of Grimsby, Lincolnshire, and about the same time, in consequence of his succeeding, by his grandfather's death, the property which had come into the family through his grandmother, assumed the name of Turner, (Charles Tennyson Turner) After a silence (at least so far as public knowledge extends) of more than thirty years, he contributed four sonnets to Macmillan's Magazine, June, 1860, and a poem to the same periodical for the month ensuing. An article from his pen, entitled My Timepiece, was published in Good Words, Jan. 1870.

Tennyson, Frederick, brother of the two preceding, and already noticed, (see Tennyson, Alfred, D.D.), published in 1854 a volume of poems entitled Days and Hours, 1854, 8vo. His brother Tennyson's verse is to that of his brother as daylight unto sunlight, And as water unto wine.

Thackeray, William Makepeace, one of the most eminent of modern English novelists and essayists, (1863,) is a grandson of the Rev. Richard Thackeray, of Hadley, Middlesex, and the son of a gentleman who held a lucrative post in the civil service of the East India Company. The author was born at Calcutta in 1811; came in boyhood to England, and was educated at the Charter-House School and at the University of Cambridge; was left an orphan with a handsome property (not less, it is stated, than £20,000) in his youth; lost part of his fortune by others, and the remainder by himself, and was then obliged to look around for a livelihood; paid some attention to law, at the Middle Temple, (called to the Bar, May 26, 1848,) and more to art, at Rome and other schools on the Continent, but finally settled on literature, and became a correspondent of The Times, (then under Barnes,) The New Monthly Magazine, (then under Maginn,) and that most humorous of English periodicals, Punch. The readers of Fraser had long felt well acquainted with the author of the tales, sketches, and essays of Michael Angelo Titmarsh, the readers of Punch had long laughed over the letters of The Fat Contributor, Miss Tickletoe's Lectures, Jeames's Diary, Punch in the East, Punch's Prize Novellists, The Snob Papers, The Traveller in London, Mr. Brown's Letters to a Young Man about Town, The Proser, and other productions in prose and verse of the same fertile pen, before they were able to thank their benefactor by his lawful patronymic. His Fraserian nom de plume, indeed, Mr. Thackeray retained (in several of his volumes) for some years after it had ceased to be a disguise to a large portion of his readers. He has given to the world the following volumes, many of which, it will be observed, are enriched by the illustrations of his own skilful pencil: to use his own phrase with reference to Vanity Fair, (declined by Colburn's Magazine,) "illuminated with the author's own candles."

1. The Paris Sketch-Book, by Mr. Titmarsh: with Numerous Designs, by the Author, on Copper and Wood, Lon., July, 1840, 2 vols. p. 8vo; 2d ed., Oct. 1840, 2 vols. p. 8vo; N. York, 1852, 2 vols. 16mo; Lon., 1866, p. 8vo. Commended by Lon. Times, Lon. Athen., Lon. Lit. Gaz., and Lon. Atlas, all 1840. *

2. The Second Funeral of Napoleon: in Three Letters to Miss Smith, of London; and The Chronicle of the Drum, [a poem], by Mr. M. A. Titmarsh, Lon., 1841, eq. 16mo. Commended by *Lon. Lit. 3. Comic Tales and Sketches; Edited and Illustrated by Mr. Michael Angelo Titmarsh, 1841, 2 vols. p. 8vo. Contain the Yellowplush Memoirs, from Fraser, and contributions to other periodicals. See Athen., 1841, 355; Lon. Lit. Gaz., 1841, 260.

"By far the best, the fullest of natural and amusing incident, and of characters with bold and firm outlines and fine and consistent details. . . One of the most remarkable books of this age—a book which is as sure of immortality as ninety-nine hundredths of modern novels are sure of annihilation."—Edin. Rev., Jan. 1854, (80,) art. vi.

"One of the most amusing, but also one of the most distressing, books we have read for many a long year. We almost long for a little exaggeration and improbability to relieve us of that sense of dreary truthfulness which weighs down our hearts, not for the Amelias and Georges of the story, but for poor kindred human nature."—Lon. Quar. Rev., Dec. 1848, (84,) art. v., (same in Liv. Age, xx. 407.)

Age*, xxviii. 473) was provoked by the strictures of the London Times on the first edition. New ed., 1856.

15. The History of Henry Esmond, Esq., a Colonel in the Service of her Majesty Queen Anne; Written by Himself, Lon., Oct. 1852, 3 vols. cr. 8vo; N. York, 1852, 8vo; Leipzig, 1852, 2 vols. 18mo; 2d ed., Lon., Dec. 18, 1852, (dated 1853,) 3 vols. cr. 8vo; 1855, 3 vols. cr. 8vo; 1857, cr. 8vo; in French, by A. F. L. De Wailly.

"Esmond is a reproduction of the manners, feelings, thoughts, and even style which prevailed from one hundred and eighty to one hundred and forty years ago. It is a wonderful tour de force. . . We cannot, however, avoid thinking that this merit has been purchased too dearly. The reader feels always that he is listening to falsetto tones; that he is looking at the imitation of an imitation. If Esmond had been confined within as short limits, it might have taken rank with the 'Defence of Natural Society.' But a parody three volumes long becomes tiresome."—Edin. Rev., Jan. 1854, (xcix,) art. vi.

"There is a higher literary power and kinder and truer humanity in this work than in any of its author's former productions."—Fraser's Mag., 1852.

"I have read, enjoyed, been interested and, after all, feel as much ire and sorrow as gratitude and admiration. And still one can never lay down a book of his without the last two feelings having their part, be the subject or treatment what it may."—CHARLOTTE BRONTË: Mrs. Gaskell's Life of Charlotte Brontë, (q. v.)

"Esmond will, we think, rank higher as a work of art than either Vanity Fair or Pendennis; because the characters are of a higher type and drawn with greater finish, and the book is more of a complete whole: not that we anticipate for it any thing like the popularity of the former of these two books, as it is altogether of a graver cast, the satire is not so pungent, the canvas is far less crowded, and the subject is distant and unfamiliar; and, may be, its excellence will not help it to a very large public."—GROVER BRUMLEY: Essays.

We have next to notice—19—a collective edition of Mr. Thackeray's early writings, complete in 4 vols. cr. 8vo, 6s. ea. (uniform with the Cheap Editions of Vanity Fair, Pendennis, Esmond, The Newcomes, and The Virginians), entitled Miscellanies in Prose and Verse: vols. i., ii., Nov., Dec., 1855, (2d ed., 1856;) iii., 1856; iv., 1857. Contents: vol. i., Ballads; The Snob Papers; The Tremendous Adventures of Major Gahagan; The Fatal Boots; Cox's Diary. Vol. ii., The Yellowplush Memoirs; Jeanie's Diary; Sketches and Travels in London; Novels by Faint Heart Hands; Character Sketches. Vol. iii., Memoirs of Barry Lyndon, [this was translated into French by A. F. L. De Waille; A Legend of the Rhine; Rebecca and Rowena; A Little Dinner at Timmins'; The Bedford Row Conspiracy. Vol. iv., The Fitzdoodle Papers; Men's Wives; A Shabby-Genteel Story; The History of Samuel Titmarsh and the Great Hogarty Diamond. The contents of the 4 volumes are also pub. in 13 Parts, (viz.: vol. i. in 4 Parts; vol. ii. in 3 Parts; vol. iii. in 3 Parts; vol. iv. in 3 Parts,) sold separately; and a number of the above and of other fugitive pieces of the author have been repub. from time to time in New York, (e.g. Appleton, 1864, 5 vols. 12mo, Leypoldt & Holt, 1866, 8 vols. sq. 16mo,) Boston, and Philadelphia.

"Mr. Thackeray, by collecting his earlier writings in the volumes before us, [4 vols. cr. 8vo, Lon., 1855-57], has done a service both to himself and the world. . . . It is impossible to read these volumes without seeing what a growing mind that of the author is."—Lon. Athen., 1857, 1220.

See, also, 1855, 1301, (same in Liv. Age, xlviii. 114,) and notice of his Ballads (repub. Bost., 1855,—some 1856,—16mo, pp. 228) in Chambers's Journal, 1856, (same in Liv. Age, xlix. 142,) and Putnam's Magazine, Dec. 1856, 623.

20. The Virginians; a Tale of the Last Century, with Illustrations on Steel and Wood by the Author, Lon., 8vo, in monthly Parts: i., Oct. 31, 1857-xxiv., Oct. 1, 1859; together, in 2 vols. 8vo: i., Oct. 1858; ii., Oct. 1, 1859. Also pub. in Harper's (N. York) Monthly, Nov. 1857-Nov. 1859, and together, N. York, Nov. 1859, 8vo. New ed., without illustrations, Lon., Nov. 1862, cr. 8vo.

"The Virginians is a sort of continuation of 'Esmond.' . . . 'The Virginians' is neither antiquarian, nor, in the strict sense, historical. It is an attempt to create a good story and good characters and at the same time to call from its grave a just age, in which this writer happens, probably from his admiration and deep study of Fielding, to take a great interest. . . . In this hybrid sort of composition, between history and fiction, we think his powers misapplied. It is at best an expeditious of strength in a tour de force. . . . To say that this novel will not rank with Mr. Thackeray's best works is very slight blame; to say that it will rank with those of his works which are less good is no slight praise."—Mind. Rev., Oct. 1859, (cx. 1839-433).

"A popular writer, Mr. Thackeray, in 'The Virginians,' had ventured to introduce Washington, in his youth, as a personage of fiction. The thought was rash and infelicitous, had the author succeeded in his daring attempt; but magnus esset ausus,—and magis was failure more complete. Mr. Thackeray takes the satirical, the mere, worldly, view of life and society; he can take no other. His characters are compounded of many vices and few if any virtues: or, if the virtues predominate, the result is a fool. He has never drawn a true and dignified woman, nor a gentleman of the highest type. He has no conception of that simplicity in which nobleness of nature most largely consists."—*FRANKLIN C. "The sad fallacy of a man of genuine powers. . . . There is not one single touch to kindle in the reader a spark of generosity or kindly feeling; not one word to awaken or stimulate a noble thought. "Mr. Thackeray next took to his laurels. The world, whether it be the world of fine gentlemen or of innocent women—the world of the first or of the second table—will at last get tired of being led down alley after alley of 'Vanity Fair.' . . . The Cornhill Magazine, referred to above, was started by Messrs. Smith, Elder & Co., 65, Cornhill, London, with Mr. Thackeray (at an enormous compensation) as editor, Jan. 1860, at one shilling per monthly number. Of No. 1 about 100,000, and of No. 2 about 70,000 copies, were sold. Mr. Thackeray retained the editorship until April, 1862. See Lon. Athen., 1860, i. 25; Lon. Lit. Budget, July 26, 1862, 265, (Mr. Thackeray as an Editor.)

Mr. Thackeray added the Short Notices to the Sketches after the English Landscape-Painters by L. Marvey, Lon. and Glasgow, 1850, sm. fol., 21s., col'd, 42s., and contributed a piece entitled Sketches of Travel to The Victoria Regia, Dec. 1861, sup. r. 8vo. The London Quarterly Review is to be added to the periodicals for which he has written. French versions of some of his works have been published from time to time in the periodicals of Paris. In the United States the sale of his works up to 1853 had been, it was asserted, (see H. C. Carey's Letters on International Copyright, Phila., 1853, 8vo, 48,) quadruple the sale in England.

The author of Jane Eyre was among the first to read the signs of the "coming man" in Mr. Thackeray's earlier acknowledged writings.

"Why have I alluded to this man? I have alluded to him, reader, because I think I see in him an intellect profounder and more unique than his contemporaries have yet recognized; because I regard him as the first social regenerator of the day; as the very master of that working corps who would restore to rectitude the warped system of things; because I think that no commentator on his writings has yet found the comparison that suits him, the terms which rightly characterise his talent. They say, he is like Fielding; they talk of his wit, humour, comic powers. He resembles Fielding as an eagle does a vulture; Fielding could stoop on carrion, but Thackeray never does. His wit is bright, his humour attractive,—but both bear the same relation to his serious genius that the mere lambent short-light, arising playing under the summer cloud does to the electric death-spark laid in its womb."—CHARLOTTE MONTG.

We quote a few later opinions:

"It is Thackeray's aim to represent life as it is actually and historically,—men and women as they are, in those situations in which they are usually placed, with that mixture of good and evil and of strength and feeble which is to be found in their characters, and liable only to those incidents which are of ordinary occurrence. He will have no faultless characters, no demigods,—nothing but men and brethren. And from this it results that, when once he has conceived a character, he works downwards and inwards in his treatment of it, making it firm and clear as all points in its relations to hard fact, and cutting down, where necessary, to the very foundations."—DAVID MASSON: British Novelists and their Styles, (1859,) Lect. IV.: Dickens and Thackeray. See, also, Lect. III.

"If it were asked what one aspect of life Mr. Thackeray has distinctively exhibited, the answer could be given in one word,—the trivial aspect. The characters he draws are neither the best of men nor the worst. But the atmosphere of triviality which envelopes them all was never so plainly perceivable. He paints the world as a great Vanity Fair, and none has done that so well.

"The realism of Thackeray can hardly fail to have a good effect in fictitious literature. It represents the extreme point of reaction against the false idealism of the Minerva Press. It is a pre-Raphaelite school of novel-writing. And, as pre-Raphaelism is not to be valued in itself so much as in being the passage to a new and nobler ideal, the stern realism of Thackeray may lead the way to something better than itself."—PETER BAYNE: Essays in Biography and Criticism, First Series, (1857,) VII.: The Modern Novel: Dickens—Hulwiler—Thackeray.

"Mr. Thackeray's humour does not mainly consist in the creation of oddities of manner, habit, or feeling, but in so representing actual men and women as to excite a sense of incongruity in the reader's mind—a feeling that the follies and vices described are deviations from an ideal of humanity—always present to the writer. The zeal is described vividly with that perception of individuality which constitutes the artist; but the description implies and suggests a standard higher than itself, and by any direct assertion of such a standard, but by an unmistakable irony. . . . No one could be simply amused with Mr. Thackeray's descriptions or his dialogues. A shame at one's own defects, at the defects of the world in which one was living, was irresistibly aroused along with the recognition of the particular portraiture. But while he was dealing with his own age, his keen perceptive faculty prevailed, and the actual predominates in his pictures of modern society."—GILBERT BRIMLEY: Essays, 1880.

"There is one point in which Fielding is a model for all times, and in which Mr. Thackeray is his worthy disciple, and, we venture to think, perfectly his equal. That point is, style and beauty of composition. The last century was certainly more studious, generally speaking, of form than ours. You may open any page of Fielding at random, and read it with pleasure, without reference to the story or context, merely as a piece of exquisite writing. The same may be said of Mr. Thackeray. . . . England in our day may regard it as some proof of her moral soundness that her greatest novelist is in all his sentiments and sympathies the deadly enemy of hypocrisy, but the constant friend of virtue."—Edin. Rev., Oct. 1859, (cx.) 438–453.

"On one point the reviewer [supra] might have dwelt a little. He merely hints at the perfection of Thackeray's composition. Now, this is his strong point. He writes the best and purest English of any author now living."—H. SHELTON MACKENZIE, M.D., D.C.L., Nov. 23, 1869.

"He is, we should say, one of the healthiest writers who has attained celebrity since the days of Scott and Byron. His style—and a man's style is, as it were, his mind's complexion—is an index of it. Agreeable, manly, colloquial English,—the English of cultivated men, but still with an little bookishness about it as possible,—such is the clear atmosphere we breathe in reading him. Very sparing of imagery, perfectly free from conceits, rarely touching the deep-toned chords of passion and sentiment,—he is always at once a master of himself, and never takes his eye off his reader. . . . What powers he has are in fair proportion with each other, and he has them all equally under control."—Lon. Athen., Oct. 3, 1867, p. 229, 230.

In Mr. Lewes's Life and Works of Goethe, 1855, 2 vols. 8vo, will be found a letter from Mr. Thackeray containing reminiscences of his residence at Weimar in his early years, and recollections of the great German poet. In July, 1837, Mr. Thackeray was an unsuccessful candidate—Cardwell 1838, Thackeray 1818—for the representation in Parliament of the city of Oxford. This result we find it impossible to regret,—desiring that the maturer years of the graphic novelist and brilliant essayist should be devoted to those historical researches to which he has been earnestly invited by one of his late critics, (see Edin. Rev., Oct. 1859), and trusting that there is some truth in the assertion (see Lon. Critic, March, 1861, notice of Lord Macaulay's History of England, vol. v.) that he has accumulated materials for a History of England in the Reign of Queen Anne.

Since the above (with the exception of notices of new editions, &c.) was written, Mr. Thackeray has ceased to live.

"Suddenly," remarks the London Times of Dec. 25, 1863, "one of our greatest literary men has departed." Never more shall the fine head of Mr. Thackeray, with its mass of silvery hair, be seen towering among us. It was but two days ago that he might be seen at his club, radiant and buoyant with glee. Yesterday morning he was found dead in his bed. With all his high spirits, he did not seem well; he complained of illness; but he was often ill, and he laughed off his present attack. He said that he was about to undergo some treatment which would work a perfect cure in his system, and so he made light of his malady. He was suffering from two distinct complaints, one of which has now wrought his death. More than a dozen years ago, while he was writing 'Pendennis,' it will be remembered that the publication of that work was stopped by his serious illness. He was brought to death's door; and he was saved from death by Dr. Elliotson, to whom, in gratitude, he dedicated the novel when he lived to finish it. But ever since that ailment he has been subject every month or six weeks to attacks of sickness, attended with violent retching. He was congratulating himself the other day on the failure of his old enemy to return, and then he checked himself, as if he ought not to be too sure of his release from his plague. On Wednesday morning the complaint returned, and he was in great suffering all day. He was no better in the evening, and his servant, about the time of leaving him for the night, proposed to sit up with him. This he declined. He was heard moving about midnight, and he must have died between two and three in the morning of yesterday. His medical attendants attribute his death to effusion on the brain. They add that he had a very large brain, weighing no less than 56½ oz.

"He thus died of the complaint which seemed to trouble him least. He died full of strength and rejoicing, full of plans and hopes. On Monday last he was congratulating himself on having finished four numbers of a new novel; he had the manuscript in his pocket, and with a boyish frankness showed the last pages to a friend, asking him to read them and see what he could make of them. When he had completed four numbers more, he said, he would subject himself to the skill of a very clever surgeon, and he no more an invalid. In the fulness of his powers he has fallen before a complaint which gave him no alarm."

Since his death have appeared—25. Denis Duval, N. York, 1864, 8vo; Lon., 1867, p. 8vo. From Cornhill Mag., Mar. et seq., 1864.

"In respect of earnest feeling, far-seeing purpose, character, incident, and a certain loving picturesqueness blending the whole, I believe it to be much the best of all his works. That he fully meant it to be so, that he had become strongly attached to it, and that he bestowed great pains upon it, I trace in almost every page."—CHARLES DICKENS.

The monument erected to Thackeray in the Poets' Corner, Westminster Abbey, was uncovered Oct. 21, 1865. It consists of a bust by Baron Marchetti, (a friend of the deceased,) upon a base of red serpentine, mounted upon a bronze support, bearing a simple record of his name and the dates of birth and death. It is fixed against a wall column in the south transept, behind the statue of Addison. To our references we now add: Poems and Essays, by W. C. Roscoe, Lon., 1860, 2 vols. p. 8vo; Essays, by S. F. In 1866 Mr. J. C. Hotten announced as in preparation: I Students' Quarters; or, Paris Life Five-and-Twenty Years Since, by W. M. Thackeray. II. Thackeray's Humour, illustrated by the Pencil of George Cruikshank, (24 designs, illustrating "The Fatal Boots" and "The Diary of Barber Cox," with letter-press descriptions,) sm. 4to. A complete uniform edition of Thackeray's Works, with new matter, in 22 vols. r. cr. 8vo, 7s. 6d. each, was published by Smith, Elder & Co., of London, and J. B. Lippincott & Co., of Phila., 1868-69: an edition of his Novels, by Harpers, N. York, in 6 vols. 8vo, was issued in 1869; an edition of his Works, by Appletons, N. York, in 12 vols., appeared in 1869-70; and Household Editions of his Novels in 6 vols. 16mo, and of his Miscellanies in 5 vols. 16mo, were published, the first in 1869 and the last in 1869-70, by Fields, Osgood & Co., of Boston.

"It is long since England has lost such a son; it will be long before she has such another to lose. He was indeed emphatically English;—English as distinct from Scotch, no less than English as distinct from Continental. The highest, purest English novelist since Fielding, he combined Addison's love of virtue with Johnson's hatred of cant; Horace Walpole's lynx eye for the mean and ridiculous with the gentleness and wide charity for mankind, as a whole, of Goldsmith. Non omnis moritur est. He will be remembered in his succession with these men for ages to come, as long as the hymn of praise rises in the old Abbey of Westminster, and wherever the English tongue is native to men, from the banks of the Ganges to those of the Mississippi."—HANNAY.

"In his subtle, spiritual analysis of men and women, as we see them and live with them; in his power of detecting the enduring passions and desires, the strengths, the weaknesses, and the decays of the race, from under the mask of ordinary worldly and town life,—making a dandy of a dancing-girl as real, as 'morning, delicate, and full of life,' as the most heroic incarnations of good and evil; in his vitality and yet lightness of handling, doing it once and forever, and never a touch too little or too much,—in these respects he stood and stands alone and watchless."—DR JOHN BROWN.

Theobald, Lewis, a literary attorney-at-law, a native of Sittingbourne, Kent, d. September, 1744, already noticed as an editor of Shakespeare, (see SHAKESPEARE, WILLIAM: COLLECTIVE EDITIONS OF SHAKESPEARE'S PLAYS AND POEMS, No. 7,) and as the hero of the Dunciad, (see CIBBER, COLLEY.) was the author of A Critical Discourse on Homer's Iliad, Lon., 1714; A Translation of the First Book of the Odyssey, with Notes, 1716; Memoirs of Sir Walter Raleigh, 1719, 8vo; Shakespeare Restored; or, Specimens of Blunders Committed and Unamended in Pope's Edition of this Poet, (title-pages vary,) 1726, r. 4to; 20 or 21 forgotten plays, (see Biog. Dramat.); of several translations, pieces of poetry, essays, &c., and many articles in Mist's Weekly Journal, The Daily Journal, and The Censor. He commenced but did not live to finish an edition of Beaumont and Fletcher. See, also, WYCHERLEY, WILLIAM, No. 6. As an editor of Shakespeare, Dr. Johnson thus grades him:

"Pope was succeeded by Theobald, a man of narrow comprehension and small acquisitions, with no native and intrinsic splendour of genius, with little of the artificial light of learning, but zealous for minute accuracy, and not negligent in pursuing it. He collated the ancient copies, and corrected many errors. A man so anxiously scrupulous might have been expected to do more, but what little he did was commonly right."—Preface to Johnson's ed. of Shakespeare.

Later in the Preface he treats him with less respect; in his Life of Pope he calls him "a man of heavy diligence with very slender powers;" and he told Burney (see Boswell's Johnson, ch. xii.) that Warburton "would make two and fifty Theobalds, cut into slices." An eminent critic of our day gives a very different verdict:

"Among the commentators on Shakespeare, Warburton, always striving to display his own acuteness and scorn of others, devotes more than any one else from the meaning. Theobald was the first who did a little."—HALLAM: Lit. Hist. of Europe, 4th ed., 1854, iii. 93.

If Theobald did only a "little," doubtless many of the poet's editors have done too much. We think Theobald often very happy in his suggestions. See *Nichols's Lit. "If my early friend Dr. Thirlwall's History of Greece had appeared a few years earlier, I should probably never have conceived the design of the present work at all; I should certainly not have been prompted to the task by any deficiencies such as those I felt and regretted in it. The comparison of the two authors affords indeed a striking proof of the progress of sound and enlarged views respecting the ancient world during the present generation. Having studied of course the same evidence as Dr. Thirlwall, I am better enabled than others to bear testimony to the learning, the sagacity, and the candour which pervades his excellent work."—Grote's History of Greece, vol. "I have fortunately just received from England Thomas' Coke's Littleton, a most valuable book. . . . It is now, beyond question, the first elementary book to be read,—as agreeable as Blackstone, and more profound."—Thomas Jefferson to Francis Pickens, (his grandson), April 9, 1822: Randall's Jefferson, 1858, ii. 464.

"This edition has been prepared with immense industry, and is a very creditable monument of the learning of Mr. Thomas. We should, nevertheless, prefer for students the original form of Hargrave and Butler's Coke upon Littleton, as we believe they would read it with more ease and with greater profit; and we would extend this remark to the folio editions, which we prefer to those in distinct volumes."—*Hoffman's Leg. "The Author expresses a confidence that he will be able to bring the whole within the compass of from 40 to 45 Parts. . . . The whole work will be capable of being bound in a single volume if desired, forming, it is believed, the most complete and (taking into consideration its extent) the most convenient, and certainly the most learned, work of the kind ever published."—Publishers' Advert., Phila., Oct. 1860.

We have before us the commendatory verdicts of Messrs. W. C. Bryant, LL.D., O. W. Holmes, M.D., A. P. Peabody, D.D., W. D. Whitney, LL.D., J. R. Lowell, W. A. Wheeler, C. P. Krauth, D.D., &c., upon the early Parts of this invaluable work.

To a large volume on Special, General, and Microscopic Anatomy, edited by Dr. S. G. Morton in 1848-9, Dr. Thomas contributed the portion (specially commended by the Charleston Med. Jour., Mar. 1849) relating to muscular action, the mechanism of locomotion, &c.; and in 1851-2 he published his First Book of Etymology, (see LYNN, JAMES, Nos. 1, 2,) which was highly approved of by Dr. Barnes Sears and other scholars. He contributed geographical vocabularies to Webster's octavo Dictionary, 1847, 8vo, the University edition, 1856, 8vo, and the Unabridged Quarto edition of 1864, and also enriched the latter by a Pronouncing Vocabulary of Modern Biographical Names. In 1857 Dr. Thomas visited India, where he spent fourteen months in the study of the Sanscrit, Persian, and other Oriental tongues, principally with a view to tracing their philological relations with the languages of Europe. He also spent about three months in Egypt, for the purpose of making himself acquainted with the rudiments of the Arabic tongue. He was for some time Professor of Latin and Greek in Haverford College, and has taught the classics privately.

Thompson, William, graduated at Queen's College, Oxford, (of which he became Fellow,) 1738; succeeded to the livings of South Weston and Hampton Poyle, Oxfordshire; became Dean of Raphoe, Ireland, and d. there about 1766. In 1734 and 1736 he wrote Stella, sive Amores, Tres Libri, and Six Pastorals, none of which he included in his collective edition of his Poems. He afterwards published: 1. Sicknes; a Poem, Lon., 1745, 4to. 2. Gondibert and Birtha; a Tragedy, 1751, 8vo. 3. Gratitude; a Poem, Oxf., 1766. See No. 4. 4. Poems on several Occasions; to which is added Gondibert and Birtha, a Tragedy, 1753, 2 vols. 8vo. Of more than ordinary merit. His Hymns to May, and his Nativity, (in which he is thought to approach Spenser,) and his poem on Sicknes, were once highly valued. See notice of No. 4 in Lon. Mon. Rev., 1758, i. 319. He superintended an edition of Bishop Joseph Hall's Virgidemarium, Oxf., 1753, 12mo, and left MS. Notes and Observations on William Browne's Works, which appeared in the edition of 1772, Lon., 3 vols. sm. 8vo, edited, when published, by T. Davies, the publisher, (p. 482, supra.) Thompson, William, President of the Natural History and Philosophical Society of Belfast, was b. in Belfast, Nov. 2, 1805, d. in London, Feb. 17, 1852. He was a contributor to Proceed. Zoolog. Soc. of London; Trans. Brit. Assoc., Annals of Nat. Hist., 1841-43, the natural history magazines, &c.: a list of more than seventy of his papers will be found in the Ray Society Bibliography. But the great work of his life was his Natural History of Ireland, 8vo, vols. i., ii., and iii. (these contain the Birds of Ireland,) 1849-51.

"A standard work, and will rank with those of our first naturalists."—Dubl. Quar. Jour. of Nat. Sci.

See favourable notices of these volumes in Lon. Athen., 1851, 971, and of vols. i. and ii. in Lon. Lit. Gaz., 1849, 55, and 1850, 100. See, also, N. Brit. Rev., May, 1854, vol. i. Before his death he made provision for the conpletion of the work, and in 1856 appeared the conclusion,—vol. iv., comprising Mammalia, Fish, Mollusca, Crustacea, and Zoophytes; Edited by Prof. Dinkie, Robert Patterson, Esq., of Belfast, and Dr. Ball; with Memoir and Portrait.

Thompson, Rev. William Hepworth, b. in York, 1810; was educated at Trinity College, Cambridge, of which he was elected a Scholar in 1830, a Fellow in 1834, Assistant Tutor in 1837, and Tutor in 1844. He was elected Regius Professor of Greek in Cambridge University, and made a Canon of Ely, in 1853; and in 1866 he succeeded Dr. Whewell in the mastership of Trinity College, Cambridge. In 1861 he was appointed a member of the Public Schools Commission. In addition to his editorial labours noticed below, he is the author of a Sermon preached in Trinity College Chapel at the Commemoration, &c., and of papers on Plato and Socrates, read before the Cambridge Philosophical Society, &c. He published The Phædra of Plato, with English Notes and Dissert., Lon., 1868, 8vo, (Whittaker's Bibl. Class.). See BUTLER, WILLIAM ARCHER, No. 4.

"We must not dismiss Professor Butler's Lectures without testifying to the admirable editing to which they have been submitted."—Lon. Spec., May 3, 1856.

"The varied and accurate erudition of Mr. W. H. Thompson's notes to these lectures give them value."—G. H. Lewis: Hist. of Philon., 2d ed., Introd.

But what says the learned editor himself?

"Of the dialect and physics of Plato, they are the only exposition at once full, accurate, and popular, with which I am acquainted; being far more accurate than the French and incomparably more popular than the German treatises on these departments of the Platonic philosophy."

"By Professor Thompson's Notes we think we may say that these lectures are doubled in value. . . . Of the series on Plato, . . . we are confident that every intelligent reader of these Lectures will join in the high encomium which the learned editor has pronounced upon them."—*Edin. Thomson, James, the author of "The Seasons," a son of the Rev. Thomas Thomson, was b. at Ednam, Roxburghshire, Scotland, September 11, 1700, and educated at the Grammar-School at Jedburgh and at the University of Dublin, where in 1719 he was entered as a student of divinity; abandoned his design on the pulpit, and in 1725 came to London in pursuit of fortune and fame; in 1726 sold to John Millar, for three guineas, his poem of Winter, (consisting when first published of only 413 lines,) of which three editions (the first fol., the 2d and 3d 8vo) were issued in this same year; in 1727 published Summer, 8vo, and a Poem on the Death of Sir Isaac Newton fol.; in 1728 appeared Spring, 8vo, (for which Andrew Miller gave him 50 guineas;) in 1728, the poem of Britannia, (anonymously,) and a Poem on the Death of Congreve, (recovered by the Rev. H. F. Carey, and reprinted by Peter Cunningham for the Percy Society in 1843, p. 8vo, pp. 32;) and Feb. 28, 1729-30, was first acted—published 1730, 8vo, and 4to—the Tragedy of Sophonisba; in 1730, 4to, was issued by subscription a collective edition of The Seasons, (including Autumn, then first published,) of which 387 subscribers took 464 copies: in the same year, by the influence of Dr. Rundle, accompanied Charles Talbot, eldest son of the Chancellor, in a tour on the Continent, where his observations of the working of despotic rule inspired his poem of Liberty, published in five separate 4to parts, 1733-38, but shortened after his decease, for his collective Works, by Sir George Lyttelton; rewarded for his attendance upon Mr. Talbot by the post of Secretary of Briefs,—the loss of which (in 1737) was partially supplied by a pension from the Prince of Wales of £100, and perhaps more than compensated by the subsequent appointment of Surveyor-General of the Leeward Islands, from which, after paying his deputy, he received about £300 per annum; in 1737 he published A Poem to the Memory of Lord Talbot, 4to; in 1738 edited his own Works, in 2 vols. 8vo, wrote a preface to Milton's Areopagitica, and produced and published his tragedy of Agamemnon, 8vo; in 1739 published—the representation was prohibited—his tragedy of Edward and Menona, 8vo; in 1740, in conjunction with David Mallet, wrote the masque of Alfred, (1740, 8vo,) in which appears the national anthem Hail Britannia, ascribed by Bolton Corney, "on no slight evidence," to Mallet; in 1745 published his tragedy (taken from Gil Blas) of Tamored and Sigismunda, 8vo; in 1748 gave to the world his Castle of Indolence, an Allegorical Poem, written in imitation of Spenser, 4to; and on the 27th of August, in the same year, was "gathered to his fathers,"—a union hastened by imprudent exposure on the water between London and his cottage in Kew-foot Lane, Richmond, where now stands the villa of the Earl of Shaftesbury. His tragedy of Coriolanus, left in MS., was, by the zeal of Sir George Lyttelton, brought upon the stage "for the benefit of his family," and recommended by a Prologue, [by Lyttelton,] which Quin, who had long lived with Thomson in fond intimacy, spoke in such a manner as showed him "to be, on that occasion, 'no actor.'" It was published in 1748, (some 1749,) 8vo.

"Mr. Thomson was at the Leisewares in the summer of 1745, and in the autumn of 1746, and proud of when he came again into the country to make a longer visit; but at the time he was expected came an account of his death. It seems he waited too long for the return of his friend, Dr. [John] Armstrong, [p. 88, supra,] and did not choose to employ any other physician. He had nothing of the gentleman in his person or address; but he made amends for the deficiency by his refined sense, spirited expressions, and a manner of speaking not unlike his friend, Quin. He did not talk a great deal, but after a pause of reflection produced something or other that accounted for his delay."

"The Seasons would make a fine poem in Latin. Its rugged phrases would lose their stiffness, and its vulgar idioms acquire a proper majesty; its property and description shine the same."—W. R., (i.e. WILLIAM SHENSTONE.) MS. note in his copy of The Seasons: see Lon. Gent. Mag., 1821, i. 226.

Collins's beautiful Ode on the Death of Thomson, "In yonder grave [or grove?] a Druid lies," is doubtless familiar to many of our readers. For arguments by Bolton Corney, &c., on "grave" and "grove," see Lon. Gent. Mag., 1843, i. 493, 602.

The Rev. Mr. Mitford, in a notice of Thomson's works, excited the curiosity, not to say the cupiditas of collectors, by the following statement:

"As 'fortune not only favours fools,' but it also not seldom seen at the elbow of the diligent and industrious, the crown of our earliest efforts by putting into our hands, at the price of one shilling and sixpence, what we would not exchange for the great ruby in the royal crown, — the edition of The Seasons of 1738, 8vo. Miller, interleaved, filled with Thomson's alterations in his own hand in every page, and with numerous alterations and emendations by Pope in his small and beautiful writing." — Lon. Gent. Mag., Dec. 1841, 564, (q. r.)

See, also, (by same,) Nov. 1843, 449, and Gray's Works, by Mitford, ii. viii., (ed. 1836.)

Mr. Peter Cunningham, an acute critic, remarks, "These corrections were in very many cases adopted by Thomson; but I cannot help thinking that the writing bears a greater resemblance to Lord Lyttelton's handwriting than to Pope's. The edition is that of 1738." — Cunningham's ed. of Johnson's Lives of the Poets, 1853, lib. 238, n.

See to the same effect a writer (whether Mr. C. or not we are not informed) in Lon. Athen., 1847, 385. At the sale of Mr. Mitford's library, in the spring of 1860, this volume was knocked down at £46.

CRITICAL OPINIONS ON THOMSON'S WRITINGS.

"As a writer, he is entitled to one praise of the highest kind: his mode of thinking, and of expressing his thoughts, is original. His blank verse is no more the blank verse of Milton, or of any other poet, than the rhymes of Prior are the rhymes of Cowley."

"In the original formation of this library (between the years 1806 and 1812) the sum of £16,633 was expended; and from that date to the present liberal accessions have been regularly made. Richard Porson was the first librarian, but his early death (25 Sept. 1808) made his term of office a very brief one. Nor, indeed, despite his brilliant scholarship and his other eminent endowments, was the office congenial to him. His successor, Mr. Malby, has told us in the Forseuiana (appended to the Talks of Samuel Rogers) that his attendance was so irregular as to draw from the directors on one occasion the pointed reproach, 'We only know you are our librarian by seeing your name attached to the receipts for your salary,' and from devoted friends the admission that the excuse was merited. But he had an excellent assistant in Mr. William Upcott, who filled the office of sub-librarian for twenty-eight years. Mr. Malby, too, continued to fill his office of principal librarian from the death of Porson to the summer of 1831. He was succeeded by Mr. Richard Thomson and Mr. E. W. Brayley as joint-librarians. To these gentlemen is mainly due that Catalogue of the Library of the London Institution, Systematically Classified, which is one of the best productions extant in its kind. The present number of volumes exceeds 62,000. The right of admission belongs of course exclusively to the proprietors and their nominees; but for a long time the library has been easily accessible for literary purposes."—EDWARD EDWARDS: Memoirs of Libraries, 1859, R. 96.

"There is an excellent printed catalogue of this library, chiefly compiled by Mr. Thomson, in 4 vols. 8vo, printed between the years 1835 and 1852. . . . This catalogue comprehends, first, a synoptical table of the classes; secondly, a plan of the arrangement, in classes, of the books themselves; thirdly, a general classified catalogue of all the books; fourthly, an index of authors' names and works; and, fifthly, an index of anonymous works, and of many different subjects of which some account is to be found in the library."—Ibid.: *Encyc. Thomson, Thomag, M.D., Regius Professor of Chemistry in the University of Glasgow, b. at Crieff, Perthshire, April 12, 1773, and educated at the parish schools of Crieff and Sterling and the University of St. Andrew's; in November, 1796, succeeded his brother (see THOMSON, JAMES, D.D.) in the editorship of the third edition of the Encyclopædia Britannica, and retained his connection with it until 1800; graduated in medicine, 1799; subsequently managed the scientific department of James Mill's (p. 1278, supra) Literary Journal, (established in 1803,) for many years lectured on chemistry, and conducted a laboratory for pupils, in Edinburgh; in 1817 was appointed a lecturer on, in 1818 Professor of, Chemistry in the University of Glasgow,—associating with him in 1841 his nephew and son-in-law, Robert Dundas Thomson, (supra), who from 1846 discharged all the duties of the chair; died "on the lovely shores of the Holy Loch," (Kilman, Argyllshire,) July 2, 1852, in his 80th year. As a lecturer and chemical writer his merits were very great; and his personal character was most estimable.

1. Dissertation Chemica Inaug. De Aëre Atmospherico, Edin., 1799, 8vo. 2. A System of Chemistry, 1802, 4 vols. 8vo. (Abridged, Phila., 1803, &c.) He published the outlines of this work in the Supp. to Encyc. Brit., under the articles Chemistry, Mineralogy, Vegetable Substances, Animal Substances, and Dyeing Substances,—all of which appeared before the publication of the Preface, Dec. 16, 1800, in which Dr. (afterwards Bishop) Gleig highly commends them. In the article on Mineralogy, written about 1798, he first introduced the use of symbols into chemical science,—acknowledged to be one of the most valuable improvements in modern chemistry, and adopted by Berzelius in his Mineralogy: in English, by John Black, of the Morning Chronicle, Lon., 1814, 8vo. System of Chemistry, 2d ed., Edin., 1802, 4 vols. 8vo. This ed. was criticised by A. Duncan, Jr., M.D., in Edin. Rev., April, 1804, 120-151. Dr. T. responded in Remarks on the Edinburgh Review of Dr. Thomson's Chemistry, 8vo; noticed in Blackw. Mag., x. 673, n. System of Chemistry, 3d ed., 1807, 5 vols. 8vo. In this ed. Dalton's views of the atomic theory, privately communicated to Dr. T. in 1804, are first introduced to the world, 4th ed., 1810, 5 vols. 8vo; 5th ed., Lon., 1817, 4 vols. 8vo; 6th ed., Edin., 1821, 4 vols. r. 8vo. This ed. was criticised in No. xxi. of Brande's Jour. of Sci., Lit., and the Arts. Dr. Thomson responded in Answer to the Review of the Sixth Edition of Dr. Thomson's System of Chemistry in No. xxi., &c., Lon., 1822, 8vo; reviewed in Blackw. Mag., xii. 40. Dr. Thomson superseded his System by the following separate treatises: I. Chemistry of Inorganic Bodies, 7th ed., 1831, 2 vols. 8vo; II. Chemistry of Organic Bodies: Vegetables, 1838, 8vo; III. 10. Outlines of Mineralogy, Geology, and Mineral Analysis, 1836, 2 vols. 8vo; Phila., 1839, 2 vols. 8vo. Partly taken from his System of Chemistry, 7th edition. It gives an account of about fifty new minerals which he had discovered in little more than ten years. 11. Treatises on Brewing and Distillation, Edin., 1849, p. 8vo.

In 1813 he originated the Annals of Philosophy, and edited it until 1822, when it was undertaken by Richard Phillips, (supra). In 1827 the work was purchased by Richard Taylor, (supra) and by him merged in the Philosophical Magazine. (See TILLOCH, ALEXANDER, LL.D.) Of the Annals there are 28 vols. 8vo, 1813-26 inc., pub. at £21. It is claimed that in the Annals Dr. T. "introduced a system of giving annual reports on the progress of science; the first of these was published in 1813, and the last in 1819." See, also, SANDFORD, SIR DANIEL KERR, Knt., D.C.L. "He understands more of old books, old laws, and old history than any man in Scotland."—SIR WALTER SCOTT: Letter to George Ellis.

"This most learned and judicious antiquary in Scotland, . . . No one has done nearly so much to recover, to arrange, to explain, and to preserve our historical monuments."—LORD COCKBURN: Life of Lord Jeffrey.

"He was a man of great and varied learning and a highly refined mind."—LORD MURRAY: Address at Anniv. Soc. of Antiqu. 1851.

"In Scotland, it was in the earlier issues of the Bannatyne that Thomas Thomson, too indolent [?] or fastidious to commit himself to the writing of a book, left the most accessible vestiges of that power of practically grasping historical facts and conditions, which Scott admitted so grudgingly and acknowledged so much benefit from."—JOHN HILL BURTON: The Book-Hunter, etc.: Some Book-Club Misc., 1862, 3p. 8vo.

"The manner in that of the worst offshoots of Carlyle and Emerson: all Mr. Thoreau's best things are spoilt in the utterance."—Lon. Athen., 1849, 1086.

See N. Amer. Rev., lxxxiii. 110, (by W. R. Alger.) 2. Walden; or, Life in the Woods, 1854, 12mo; new ed., 1862, 12mo; 1865, 16mo.

"When I wrote the following pages, or rather the bulk of them, I lived alone in the woods, a mile from any neighbor, in a house which I had built myself, on the shore of Walden Pond, in Concord, Massachusetts, and earned my living by the labor of my hands only."—Author.

This self-imposed hermitage was enjoyed for two years and two months, commencing in March, 1845.

"In describing his hermitage and his forest life, he says so many pithy and brilliant things, and offers so many pungent and, we may add, so many just comments on society as it is, that his book is well worth the reading, both for its actual comments and its suggestive capacity."—A. P. PEABODY: N. Amer. Rev., lxxix. 530.

Thoreau published, in R. W. Emerson's Dial, a translation of the Prometheus Fettered, of which a notice by the late President Felton will be found in N. Amer. Rev., Oct. 1849, 414. During the latter weeks of his life he corrected the proof-sheets of several articles for the Atlantic Monthly Magazine; and these (Walking, Autumnal Tints, and Wild Apples) were published in the Nos. for June, October, and November, 1862. A biographical sketch of Thoreau will be found in the Atlantic Monthly for August, 1862, 239-249. Since the preceding was written, two more papers of Thoreau's have appeared in the Atlantic Monthly, (viz.: Night and Moonlight, in No. for Nov. 1863, and Visit to Cape Cod Light-House, in No. for Dec. 1864,) and the following volumes of his have been published:

3. Excursions in Field and Forest, (with a biographical sketch by R. W. Emerson,) 1863, 16mo; 1865, 16mo. 4. The Maine Woods, 1864, 16mo; 1865, 16mo. 5. Cape Cod, 1865, 16mo. See Lon. Reader, 1865, ii. 344. 6. Letters to Various Persons, with Editor's Notice, (by R. W. Emerson,) 1865, 16mo. Commended by Atlantic Mon., Oct. 1865, 504. 7. A Yankee in Canada; with Anti-Slavery and Reform Papers, 1862, 12mo. See notices of Thoreau in N. Amer. Rev., Oct. 1863, 387, (by Rev. J. H. Ward,) and Oct. 1865; Atlantic Mon., Sept. 1863, 280, (by Louisa M. Alcott;) Alger's Genius of Solitude, 1867, 12mo.

"Lot 92 of the sixth day's (Strawberry) sale is thus described in the Sale Catalogue:

"92. A folio volume, written upon vellum, of Old English Poetry, from the library of R. Thoresby, very curious."
"At Thoresby's sale Walpole gave £1 for the very valuable volume of York Miracle Plays, and at Walpole's sale the late Mr. Thomas Dodd gave £220 for it. Mr. Dodd sold the volume to Mr. Bright, of Bristol, at whose sale in 1844 it was bought by the late Mr. Thorne for £305. It is now the property of Lord Ashburham. Walpole was not fully aware of its value; for there is no mention of it in his own account of Strawberry Hill."—Walpole's Letters, Cunningham's ed., (1861.) ix. 325.

The notice in Lon. Athen. (1860, ii. 643) was unfavourable; and so were the comments of a number of correspondents (F. Masson, L. Reeve, Henry McConnell, W. H. Carpenter, John Pye, Henry Elliot, and R. J. Lane) of that periodical: see 1861, ii. 691, 765, 808, 848, and 1862, i. 19, 51, 296, 331, 363. To Mr. Reeve and Mr. Pye Mr. Thornbury responded, (1862, i. 260.) See also, Oliphant Hamst's Hand-Book for Fictitious Names, 1868, 152, and Lon. Reader, 1865, i. 510. If we assert that Mr. Thornbury's book "came off with flying colours," the phrase must be understood in an artistic rather than in a military sense. But the reader must be his own judge. It is to be remembered that Mr. Thornbury is the author of the Life of Turner in Encyc. Brit., 8th ed., xxi., Dec. 1860. 15. True as Steel, 1863, 3 vols. p. 8vo.

Thornton, Bonnell, b. in London, 1724. was educated at Westminster School and at Christ Church, Oxford; studied medicine, but subsequently devoted himself to literature in London; d. 1768. 1. An Ode on St. Cecilia's Day, adapted to the Ancient British Music; viz., the Salt-Box, the Jews-Harp, the Marrow-Bones and Cleavers, the Humstrum or Hurdy-gurdy, &c.; with an Introduction giving some Account of these truly British Instruments, Lon., 1762, 4to. Thus Watt gives the date; Lowndes has it 1765, 4to; Croker remarks, "In the original edition of this ode, now before me, the date on the title-page is 1749—a mistake, no doubt, for 1769."—Croker's Boswell's Johnson, ed. 1848, ch. xvi., notes, (q. v.)

We find it noticed in Lon. Mon. Rev. for June, 1768, 479, 4to. (since anno) where it is said it was "written some years ago." The date 1749 was probably part of the joke. Dr. Johnson found more humour in it than Mr. Croker was able to discover.

2. The Comedies of Plautus; translated into Familiar Blank Verse, 1707, 2 vols. 8vo; revised, 1769, 2 vols. 8vo: The Merchant was translated by George Colman the Elder; the Captives, by Richard Warner. Warner translated the plays of Plautus not in these vols., and pub. them in 3 vols. 8vo, 1774. The whole are known as Thornton's translations, 1779-84, 5 vols. 8vo. Thornton's translations are considered the best in the volumes. The notes, from the best commentators, add to the value of this edition. 3. The Battle of the Wigs; an additional Canto to Dr. Garth's Poem of The Dispensary, 1768, 4to. This was followed by his City Latin, in ridicule of the inscription on Blackfriars Bridge. He contributed to The Student, (pub. at Oxford, Jan. 31, 1760-July 3, 1761) authors, T. Warton, C. "He was the happiest of any occasional writer in his day." MATTHEW: Journals of Lit., Dial. I., notes.

Tickell, Thomas, son of the Rev. Richard Tickell, was b. at Bridekirk, Cumberland, 1686; took his degree of M.A. at Queen's College, Oxford, 1708; and was chosen Fellow, 1710; was introduced to literary circles and public employment by Addison, who in 1717, when he became Secretary of State, made Tickell Under-Secretary, greatly to the disgust of Steele; was appointed Secretary to the Lords Justices of Ireland in 1724, and held this post until his death, April 23, 1740. He gained Addison's eye by his complimentary verses on the Great Man's Rosamond, (in Tonson's Sixth Miscellany, 1709,) and later won his affections, which he never lost, by his personal merits and social virtues. 1. Poem to the Lord Privy Seal on the Prospect of Peace, Lon., 1713. Six editions. Praised in the Spectator. On the arrival of George I., Tickell celebrated the event in his Royal Progress, published in the Spectator. 2. The First Book of Homer's Iliad, Translated into English Verse by Thomas Tickell, Esq., 1715, 4to. We have already adverted (ADDISON, JOSEPH; POPE, ALEXANDER; 9. TRANSLATION OF HOMER) to Pope's suspicion (see Spence's Anecdotes, by Singer) that Addison was the translator of this book of Homer, and that it was produced for the express purpose of injuring his own translation.

"Is there any external evidence to support the grave accusation? The answer is short. There is none."—LORD MACAULAY: Life and Writings of Addison: Edit. Rev., July, 1843, and in his Essays.

Addison owned that he had corrected Tickell's lines, and Lord Macaulay—Warburton, Steele, and Young to the contrary notwithstanding—believes that he did no more. See, also, Biog. Brit., 2d ed., i. (1778) 56, art. "Addison."

"Addison declared that the rival versions were both good, but that Tickell's was the best that ever was made. . . . The pulchre is now given universally to Pope; but I think the first lines of Tickell's were rather to be preferred, and Pope seems to have since borrowed something from them in the correction of his own."—DR. JOHNSON: Life of Tickell, in his Lives of the Poets, P. Cunningham's ed., 1864, ii. 321, 323. See, also, Tickell's Poems, 1779, sm. 8vo, (Johnson's English Poets.)

See specimens of Tickell's version in Blackw. Mag., xxix. 570 et seq., and same in Professor Wilson's Works, viii., (1857:) Homer and his Translators. 10. An Epistle from a Lady in England to a Gentleman at Avignon, 1717. Anon. Five editions. In defence of the royal cause, during the dispute on the Hanoverian succession, Tickell's poems will be found in Chalmers's English Poets, vol. xi., and some of them in several of the collections of the British poets. An American edition of his Poems was published Boston, 1851, 16mo. See, also, PARNELL, THOMAS. The longest of his other poems not here noticed is Kensington Garden, first published in 1722; a greater favourite was his ballad of Colin and Lucy. He contemplated a translation of the whole of the Iliad, (which he abandoned in favour, or fear, of Pope,) and commenced translations of the Odyssey and Lucretius; nor should it be forgotten that he contributed papers to The Spectator and The Guardian; but his fame will ever rest on his Elegy to Addison, prefixed to his edition of that poet's Works, (1721, 4 vols. 4to, some l. p.) of which Dr. Johnson declares that there is not "a more sublime or more elegant funeral poem to be found in the whole compass of English literature." This eulogy has not escaped criticism; and Steele's verdict that the Elegy is only "prose in rhyme" has been recently (Knight's Eng. Cyc., Biog., vi., 1833, 52) cordially endorsed. Yet Johnson's commendation is supported by eminent authorities:

"This Elegy by Mr. Tickell is one of the finest in our language. There is so little new that can be said upon the death of a friend, after the complaints of Ovid and the Latin Itala in this way, that one is surprised to see so much novelty in this to strike us, and so much interest to affect."—GOLDSMITH.

"Many tributes were paid to the memory of Addison; but one alone is now remembered. Tickell bewailed his friend in an elegy which would do honour to the greatest name in our literature, and which unites the energy and magnificence of Dante to the tenderness and purity of Cowper."—LORD MACAULAY: Life and Writings of Addison, (ut supra.)

"Tickell's verses on Addison's death perfect. Liked much of his Kensington."—(C. J. Fox: Recollec. by S. Rogers, 1859, 68.)

Tighe, Mary, the daughter of the Rev. William Blackford, by Theodosia, the daughter of William Tighe, of Rosanna, co. Wicklow, Ireland, was married to Henry Tighe, M.P., of Woodstock, co. Wicklow, and d. March 24, 1810, after an illness of six years. Perhaps she is better known to many as the subject of Moore's touching lyric, "I saw Thy Form in Youthful Prime," and Mrs. Hemans's "Grave of a Poetess," than by her own exquisite verses. Her poem of Psyche, or the Legend of Love, (founded on the story of Cupid and Psyche as related in the Golden Ass of Apuleius) was privately printed (100 copies) by C. Whittingham, Lon., 1805, 12mo, pp. 214. After her death appeared: Psyche, with other Poems, by the Late Mrs. Henry Tighe, (with portrait,) 1811, large 4to, pp. 314; 3d ed., 1811, 8vo; Phila., 1812, 12mo; again, Lon., 1812, 8vo; 1813, 8vo; 1816, 8vo; Psyche, 1843, 24mo; also pub. with Apuleius's Golden Ass, 1853, p. 8vo, (Bohn's Class. Lib., R.) Psyche, written in the Spenserian stanza, managed with great skill, is in six cantos.

"The three last cantos . . . are beyond all doubt the most faultless series of verses ever produced by a woman."—Six JAMES MACINTOSH: Life, &c. (q. v.)

"The Psyche of Mrs. Tighe has a languid beauty, probably resembling that of her person. . . . The greater part of the poem is little worth, except as a strain of elegance; but now and then we meet with a fancy not unworthy a pupil of Spenser."—LIGHT HUNT: Men, Women, and Books, &c. (q. v.)

"An adventurous and elaborate effort, full of power and beauty, which wanted only a little more artistic skill and concentration to have entitled it to a place among first-class productions."—D. M. MOIR: Sketches of Publ. Lit., 3d ed., 1856, 37.

Tillotson, John, D.D., the son of a Puritan clothier, was b. at Sowerby, Yorkshire; became a pensioner of Clare Hall, Cambridge, 1647, and a Fellow, 1651; left the Presbyterians, submitted to the Act of Uniformity, and became Curate of Cheshunt, Hertford, 1661-62; Rector of Kedington, Suffolk, 1663; Preacher to Lincoln's Inn and Lecturer at St. Lawrence Jewry, both in 1664; Preb. of Canterbury, 1669-70; Dean of Canterbury, 1672; Preb. of St. Paul's, 1676; Canon-Residentiary of St. Paul's, 1677; Dean of St. Paul's, 1689; Archbishop of Canterbury,—greatly against his will,—1690; d. Nov. 22, 1694.

"He was buried in the church of St. Lawrence Jewry, near Southwall. It was there that he had won his immense oratorical reputation. He had preached there during the thirty years which preceded his elevation to the throne of Canterbury. . . .

His remains were carried through a mourning population. The hearse was followed by an endless train of splendid equipages from Lambeth through Southwark and over London Bridge. Burnet preached the funeral sermon. His kind and honest heart was overcome by so many tender recollections that, in the midst of his discourse, he paused and burst into tears, while a loud moan of sympathy rose from the whole auditory. The Queen could not speak of her favorite instructor without weeping. Even William was visibly moved. 'I have lost,' he said, 'the best friend that I ever had, and the best man that I ever knew.' . . . Such was his fame among his contemporaries that those sermons which in 1825 were purchased by the booksellers for the almost incredible sum of two thousand five hundred guineas, equivalent in the wholesale trade in which the silver coin then was, to at least three thousand six hundred pounds. Such a price had never before been given in England for any copyright."—LORD MACAULAY: Hist. of Eng., 10. ch. x. See, also, ch. xviii.; 11. ch. x., xiv.; 11. ch. vi.; v., Notes to vol. ix.

EDITIONS OF TILLOTSON'S WORKS.

Tillotson himself published many single sermons and discourses, The Rule of Faith, 1666, 8vo. 2d ed., 1676, 8vo, 3d ed., 1688, 8vo, and several volumes of sermons, viz.: Sermons on Several Occasions, 1671, 8vo; same, with the addition of vol. ii., 1678, 8vo; Twelve Sermons, 1686, 8vo; Fifty-four Sermons, and the Rule of Faith, 1691, fol., (again, 1699, fol.; 1710, fol.) Four Sermons concerning the Divinity and Incarnation of our Blessed Saviour, 1693; Six Sermons on Several Occasions, 1694, 8vo, (vol. ii. pub. by Dr. Ralph Barker, 1696, 8vo.) Dr. Ralph Barker, his chaplain, edited his posthumous Sermons, (vide infra) pub. 1694, 14 vols. 8vo; again, 1695, &c., 14 vols. 8vo; 1704, 14 vols. 8vo. A collective edition of his Works—254 Sermons, Rule of Faith, Prayers, &c.—followed, in 3 vols. fol.: i., containing all the Sermons and Treatises published by himself, 1707; again, 1710; ii., iii., Sermons published after his decease by Dr. Ralph Barker, 1712. TILLOTSON'S STYLE.

Addison considered Tillotson the chief standard of our tongue; Locke recommends his works as models of perspicuity and propriety of language; Dr. Doddridge pronounces "his method admirably clear beyond almost any other man;" Dryden's opinion has been already quoted, (p. 524, supra: quotation from Congreve.)

One of the most eminent of his contemporaries tells us,

"He was not only the best preacher of the age, but seemed to have brought preaching to perfection; his sermons were so well heard and liked, and so much read, that all the nation proposed him as a pattern and studied to copy after him."—BISHOP BURNET: Hist. of Our Times, ed. 1833, 242.

"Tillotson taught by his sermons more ministers to preach well, and more people to live well, than any man since the apostles' days. He was the ornament of the last century, and the glory of his function; in the pulpit, another Chrysostom; and in the episcopal chair, a second Cramer."—Wifford's Memoirs.

"The way to obtain this [perspicuity] is to read such books as are allowed to be writ with the greatest clearness and propriety, in the language that a man uses. An author excellent in this faculty, as well as several others, is Dr. Tillotson, late Archbishop of Canterbury, in all that is published of his."—JOHN LOCKE: Some Thoughts concerning Reading and Study.

"Art, eloquence, and perspicuity appear in the utmost perfection in Tillotson's sermons; and when I would labour to compose a sermon, I would prepare my mind, and consequently my style, with reading some few of those discourses his hand."—Dr. WOTTON: On Studying Divinity.

"Happy is the man who can form his style on that of Tillotson!"—DEAN STANHOPE.

"He is all over natural and easy in the most unadorned and freest elegance of thoughts and words: his diction, both in his reasoning and his style, like a gentle and even current, is clear and deep, and calm and strong. His language is so pure no water can be more; it floweth with so free, unobscured a stream, that it never impress the reader or itself. Every word possesses its proper place."—DR. H. FAIRBANKS.

"His sermons interest the heart and convince the understanding. Easy and perspicuous, good sense and sincere piety, are their distinguishing character. His many excellencies considered, he will forever remain the boast of this nation, as one of its best writers, and probably as its ablest divine."—ANDREW TAPPAN.

"The unaffectedness of every country nearly resemble each other, and a page of our Confessions and your Tillotson have scarce any material difference."—GOLDSWORTHY.

"By reading Tillotson's works with care and observation, you will not only learn true notions of religion, but also the way and manner of writing English correctly and purely. His style I take to be the best standard of the English language."—ROBERT NELSON: Letters to George Harper.

Bickersteth thought his "notions of religion" not unexceptionable:

"His low views of sacrifices have been justly commented on by Archbishop Magee, [Discourses on the Atonement, ii. 219-231.] It is the general withholding of the all-enlivening and vivifying doctrines of the gospel, and frequent statements which tend another way, (statements to which the excesses of former times seem to have given rise,) that form our grand objections to the divinity of Tillotson."—CHRISTIAN STUDENT, 4th ed., 285. See, also, GINNOR, REMUND, No. 9, (quotation from Bickersteth.)

"Tillotson's method is clear; his notions of religion are much in the Arminian strain; his style is defective both in harmony of numbers and energy of manner."—DR. WILLIAMS: Christian Student, 5th ed., 316.

"Simply in the great beauty of Archbishop Tillotson's manner. . . . His style is always pure, indeed, and perspicuous, but careless and remiss; too often feeble and languid; little beauty in the construction of his sentences, which are frequently suffered to drag unharmoniously, seldom any attempt towards strength or sublimity."—DR. BLAIR: Rhetoric and H. L., Lect. XIX. (p. v.) See, also, Lects. X. XI, XII, XV.

"You cannot sleep with Taylor; you cannot forbear thinking with Barrow. But you may be much at your ease in the midst of a long lecture from Tillotson—clear and rational and equable as he is. Perhaps the last quality may account for it."—BISOP WARREN: Letters from a Late Sin Prelate, Lett. I.

"Without soaring to the height of eloquence, Tillotson refined the language of the pulpit."—CHATELAIN: Sketches of Eng. Lit., ii. 195.

"Tillotson's merit is unquestionably great; . . . but there are those who venture to suggest that he has been too much celebrated as a model of fine composition."—DR. KEOK.

"His words are frequently ill chosen, and almost always ill placed; his periods are tedious and unharmonious, as his metaphors are generally mean, and often ridiculous."—WILLIAM MURKIN: Fitzosborne's Letters.

"I should not advise a preacher at this day to imitate Tillotson's style; though I don't know; I should be cautious of objecting to what has been applauded by so many suffrages."—DR. JOHNSON: Life, by Boswell, ch. ixlii.

"He [Johnson] could but just endure the smooth verbosity of Tillotson."—SIR JOHN HAWKINS.

"The sermons of Tillotson were for half a century more read than any in our language. They are now bought almost as waste paper, and hardly read at all. Such is the fickleness of religious taste, as abundantly numerous instances would prove. Tillotson is reckoned verbose and languid. He has not the former defect in nearly so great a degree as some of his eminent predecessors; but there is certainly little vigour or vivacity in his style. . . . Tillotson is always of a tolerant and catholic spirit, enforcing right actions rather than orthodox opinions, and obnoxious for that and other reasons, to all the bigots of his own age."—HALLAM: Lit. Hist. of Europe, 4th ed., 1854, iii. 207.

See, also, STILLINGFLEET, EDWARD, D.D., (quotations from Hallam and Burnet.)

"Archbishop Tillotson has pronounced an authoritative opinion in favour of Natural Religion as essential to the proof of Revealed. His admirable sermons abound in such statements,—thus, in the 41st. . . . The sermon on Steadfastness in Religion, one of the Archbishop's great masterpieces, and in which he demonstrates against Rome the right of private judgment, tallies with the 41st in the doctrine on Natural Religion."—LORD BROGHAM: Discourse on Natural Theology, ed. 1856, 135, n.

"Mary [Queen of England] had a way of interrupting tattle about eloquence, duels, and play-debts, by asking the tattlers, very quietly, yet significantly, whether they had ever read her favourite sermon, Dr. Tillotson's on Evil-Speaking. . . . Tillotson still keeps his place as a legitimate English critic. His brightest flights were indeed far below those of Taylor, of Barrow, and of South; but his oratory was more correct and equable than theirs. . . . His style is not brilliant; but it is pure, transparently clear, and equally free from the levity and from the effusions which disfigure the sermons of some eminent divines of the seventeenth century. . . . The greatest charm of his compositions, however, is derived from the benignity and candour which appear in every line, and which shone forth not less conspicuously in his life than in his writings."—LORD MACAULAY: Hist. of Eng., iii. ch. xl, xiv.

Tindal, Matthew, LL.D., b. at Beer-Perres, Devonshire, about 1667, studied at Lincoln College, Oxford, afterwards at Exeter College, and was finally elected to a law fellowship at All Souls'; LL.D., 1685, and soon afterwards joined the R. Catholic Church, in which he attended mass for the first time at Candlemas, 1688,—publicly receiving the sacrament in his college chapel at Easter following; resided chiefly in London, where he frequently sat as Judge in the Court of Delegates, and d. there, August 16, 1733. 1. Four Discourses, (collective edits.) Lon., 1694, 4to; 1709, 8vo. Anon. 2. The Rights of the Christian Church Asserted, 1706-7, 8vo. Privately printed. 3 edits. See No. 4. This attack upon hierarchical supremacy was replied to by Carroll, a R.C. priest, George Hickes, D.D., (No. 7.) Samuel Hill, William Oldisworth, Conyers Place, William Wotton, D.D., &c.

"This work was prohibited, and a bookseller indicted for selling a copy; yet it went through three editions. Few works ever caused more stir amongst the clergy."—Dr. Wotton.

He subsequently published a number of pamphlets, and—6. Christianity as Old as the Creation; or, The Gospel a Replication of the Law of Nature, vol. i., 1730, sm. 4to; 1732, 8vo. This deistical work, and the controversy elicited, have already claimed our notice: see BUDGELL, EUNTAGE; BROWNE, SIMON; BURNET, THOMAS, D.D.; CONYBEARE, JOHN, D.D.; FOSTER, JAMES, No. 6; JACKSON, JOHN; LELAND, JOHN, D.D., No. 1; MIDDLETON, CONYERS, D.D., No. 8; STERNING, HENRY, D.D., (Chancellor,) Nos. 2 and 3; WILLIAMS, W. 106 answers had appeared by 1760.

"This was not only the most important work that Deism had yet produced, composed with care, and bearing the marks of thoughtful study of the chief contemporary arguments, Christian as well as Deist, but derives an interest from the circumstance that it was the book to which, more than to any other single work, Bishop Butler's Analogy was designed as a reply."—FARRAR: Crit. Hist. of Free Thought, 1862, Lect. IV., (q. v.) See, also, Notes, Lect. VIII., n. 49.

Tindal, Nicholas, nephew of the preceding, was b. in Devonshire, 1687; M.A. of Exeter College, Oxford, 1713; chosen Fellow of Trinity College; Vicar of Great Waltham, Essex, and Rector of Alverstoke, Hampshire; obtained the living of Colborne, Isle of Wight, 1740; became Chaplain of Greenwich Hospital; d. 1774. 1. History of Essex, Nos. 1 and 2. 1720, 4to. No more published. 2. Antiquities, Sacred and Profane: vol. i., Lon., 1727, 4to. In Nov.: never completed. From the French Dissertations of A. Cailmet. 3. History of England; translated from the French of M. de Rapin Thoyras, with Additional Notes, 1726-31, 21 vols. 8vo; 2d ed., 1732-33, weekly Nos., 2 vols. fol.; 3d ed., 1743, 2 vols. fol., (Trans. of the Continuation of Rapin's History, by Thomas Lediard, 1732-36, 3 vols. fol.) Continuation from 1688 to the Accession of King George II., by Tindal, 1744-47, in weekly Nos., 2 vols. in 3 Parts, fol.; 2d ed., 1751, 2 vols. fol. New edits. of the History and Continuation: 1755, 2 vols. 8vo; continued to 1767, 1767-69, 21 vols. 8vo; 1784-89, 5 vols. fol. There are some of the octavo ed. dated 1745 and 1747, and some of the folio ed. dated 1761. Of the Rapin and Tindal, 1743-47, 5 vols. fol., some of the former are on large and largest paper, and some of the latter are on fine paper. If you wish the best folio impression of the whole, (see collation in Rohn's Lowndes, 2047,) get the five vols. 1734-47, or 1734-51, (which include the Medallist History, 1745, also pub. sep.); if you seek the best octavo edition, secure that of 1757-69, 21 vols. 8vo. The portraits by Houbraken and engravings by Vertue add to the value of Rapin and Tindal's volumes. The Abridgment, or Summary, at the end of the Continuation, (also pub. sep. 1747, 3 vols. 8vo.) is ascribed to Philip Morant, who is said to have aided Tindal in the History and Continuation. Archbishop Coxe asserts (Mem. of Sir R. Walpole, Pref.) that the Continuation was "principally written by Dr. [Thomas] Birch,"—assisted by "persons of political eminence." He praises the Continuation highly; both this and the History are very valuable. "Hume wrote his History for James, Rapin for instruction."

Dr. Todd is thought to have proved that the MSS. used by Perren in compiling his history of the Vaudois are now in the Library of Trinity College, Dublin. Dr. Todd, who was one of the founders of the Irish Archaeological Society, edited the Irish Version of the Historia Britonum of Nennius, Dublin, 1848, 4to, The Martyrology of Donegal, The Book of Hymns of the Ancient Church of Ireland, 1856, 4to, and other Irish tracts, and contributed to Notes and Queries, &c.*

"At the sale of the library of the late Rev. Dr. Todd, the books fetched prices far higher than were ever known in Dublin. His Irish MSS. realized £780, and his interleaved copy of Ware, richly annotated by Dr. Todd, produced no less than £460. It was bought for the University Library. O'Connor's 'Scriptures Hibernice' fetched £36; Fleming's 'Collectanea Sacra,' £70; the 'Mural of St. Patrick's Cathedral,' dated 1862, add for £73 10s.; the 'Book of Lismore,' £43 10s.; and the 'Book of Clonmacnoise,' £31 10s. Many of the MSS. were copied for Dr. Todd from unique MSS. in the public libraries of England, Ireland, and Belgium."—Notes and Queries, Dec. 4, 1869, 495.

Toland, John, (baptized Janus Junius,) b. in Londonderry, 1609 or 1670, of Roman Catholic parents, in his 16th year became a zealous Protestant, and at one time bade fair to be a Dissenting divine. Later in life, though still at times professing Christianity, he figured as a Pantheist and an enemy to revealed religion. He studied at the Universities of Glasgow, Edinburgh, and Leyden, spent some time amidst the learned men and books of Oxford, and acquired a larger fund of recondite lore than he was able to use to the good of himself or others. A life of unprofitable literary activity was arrested by death at Putney, March 11, 1722. Of his many treatises—theological, practical, and biographical, a few of which are in Latin—we notice:

1. Christianity not Mysteries, Lon., 1696, 8vo; 2d ed., with additions, Amst., 1702, 8vo. - Tooke, John Horne, M.P., the son of John Horne, a pulterer, adopted his last name in compliment to his benefactor, William Tooke, Esq., of Purley. The subject of our notice was b. at Westminster, June 25, 1736, and educated at Westminster, Eton, and St. John's College, Cambridge; to please his father, was ordained deacon and priest, and officiated as clergyman for several years; to please himself, returned to the study of the law, (which his clerical orders debarred him from practising,) and soon became famous as a radical politician of the Wilkes school; in 1777 was prosecuted by the ministry for a libel,—having charged the king's troops with murdering the Americans at Lexington in 1775,—and condemned to a fine of £200 and an imprisonment of twelve months; in 1794 was arraigned for high treason, mainly, as it appears, on account of his connection with the Constitutional Society, and acquitted after a trial in which he displayed great tact and address; in 1790 and 1796 was an unsuccessful candidate for Parliament, to which, however, he was returned (for Old Sarum, by Lord Camelford) in 1801; passed his closing years in retirement at Wimbledon, where he d. March 18, 1812. Ample details of his political career—the discussion of which does not enter into the plan of our work—will be found in the authorities cited below.
1. The Petition of an Englishman, 1765. Consists principally of apologies for the private conduct and immoral writings of John Wilkes. 2. Sermon: before 1773. 3. Letter to John Dunning, Esq., 1778, 8vo. Noticed in Lon. Mon. Rev., 1778, ii. 116. Suggested by remarks on the particles employed by the attorney-general in his indictment and by the judges in his sentence. It was afterwards incorporated in No. 5. 5. Letter to Lord Ashburton [formerly John Dunning, Esq.] from Mr. Horne, &c., 1782, 8vo. On Parliamentary reform: noticed in Lon. Mon. Rev., Aug. 1782, 137. 6. ENEA ITEPO-ENTA, or the Diversions of Purley, 1786, 8vo; expanded to 2 vols. 4to: i., 1798; ii., 1805; Phila., 1806, 2 vols. 8vo; New edition, Revised and Corrected by Richard Taylor, with Numerous Additions from the Copy prepared by the Author for Republication; to which is annexed his Letter to John Dunning, 1829, 2 vols. 8vo; again, 1840, 8vo; 1857, 8vo; 1860, 8vo; adv. to 16s., 1869, 8vo. To this work should be added: I. Criticisms on the Diversions of Purley, by John Cassander, 1790, 8vo. See BRUCKNER, JOHN. II. Anti-Tooke: or, An Analysis of the Principles and Structure of Language, by John Fearn, 1824, 2 vols. 8vo. III. A Sequel to the Diversions of Purley, &c., by John Barclay, 1820, 1827, demy 8vo. See, also, RICHARDSON, CHARLES, LL.D., Nos. 1 and 3; SALMON, NICHOLAS, No. 3; STACKHOUSE, THOMAS, No. 2. Withers's Aristarchus, 1822, 8vo, should also accompany the Diversions of Purley. Respecting the value of the last-named work, wide differences of opinion have always existed.
- "Horne Tooke's is certainly a wonderful work; but the great merit was the original thought. The light which shines through such impenetrable words as articles and pronouns is admirable,—the 'and' and 'it.' No single book, perhaps, ever so much illustrated language: yet how much more might he have done, if he had known the collateral languages! Adolung's Dictionary alone would have rendered great assistance."—SIR JAMES MACLEINTOSH: Life, i. ch. iii.
- "He has made one of the driest subjects in the whole range of literature of science one of the most amusing and even lively of books: nor did any one ever take up the Diversions of Purley (as he has quaintly chosen to call it) and lay it down till some other avocation tore it from his hands. The success of this system has been such as its great essential merits and its more superficial attractions, combined, might have led us to expect. All men are convinced of its truth; and as every thing which had been done before was superseded by it, so nothing has since been effected unless in pursuing its views and building upon its solid foundations."—LORD BRIDGEMAN: States. Trans. of Geo. III., ed. 1856, ii. 106: Mr. Horne Tooke.

"Dire have been the disappointments incurred by the Divisions of Purley,—one of the toughest books in existence. It has even cast a shade over one of our best story-books, The Divisions of Hollycot, by the late Mrs. Johnstone."—JOHN HILL BARNOR: The Book-Hunter, etc., (1880) Part 2: His Functions.

"The first acquaintance with the 'Divisions of Purley' must have formed an epoch in the life of many a student."—R. C. TAYLOR: On the Study of Words.

"Horne Tooke . . . applied to grammar the general principles of the English sensualistic school."—VICTOR COUX: Course of the Hist. of Mod. Philos., Wight's trans., Lect. XIV.

"Every man who aspires to a thorough knowledge of the English language must carefully read this ingenious book, which is as interesting as it is instructive."—DR. E. WILLIAMS: Christian Preacher, 5th ed., 365.

"The Divisions of Purley is one of the most consummate compounds of ignorance and presumption that ever practised with success on human credulity. . . . We pronounce our sentence on it in the old formula, that what is true in it is not new, and that what is new is not true."—Blackw. Mag., April, 1840, (xlvii.) 484.

"The distance between what he has proved and what he wishes us to believe that he has proved is enormous."—EARL DUBLY: Lon. Quar. Rev., June, 1812, (vii.) 321.

"In short, we know few books more instructive than the Divisions of Purley to those who are able and willing to think for themselves; but those who are content to take up their opinions on trust, that is to say, the great majority of readers, are as likely to be misled by its author as directed aright."—Lon. Quar. Rev., Sept. 1833, (liv.) 311.

Dugald Stewart (see the 5th of his Prelim. Essays and his Prelim. Dissert. to Enyey, Brit.) is a warm opponent of the Divisions of Purley.

"It would be difficult to imagine a worse biographer than Mr. Tooke. As Dr. Johnson said of his friend Tom Birch, he is 'a dead hand at a life.' Nor is he a more lively hand at a Note. In both cases he compiles with singular clumsiness, and his compilations are not always harmless. But, though Mr. Tooke is a bad biographer and a bad annotator, he is a worse critic."—JOHN FORSTER: Edin. Rev., Jan. 1845, 46; repub. in Forster's Hist. and Biog. Essays, 1858, 2 vols. p. 8vo.

"Diligence, impartiality, and superior means of acquiring intelligence to illustrate his subject, are the merits of Mr. Tooke's work.—merits displayed in the former and augmented in the present publication."—Lon. Lit. Gaz., 1844, 362.

"Mr. Tooke's version of French history is so obsolete, and his plan of compiling it so devoid of attraction, that we cannot say to what class of readers his book will be useful. . . . It is ostentatiously dull, at the same time that it is meagre and shallow."—Lon. Athen., 1855, 1055.

Mr. Tooke assisted his father in vols. i.–v. of the General Biographical Dictionary, compiled the chronicle and miscellaneous departments of Dodsley's Annual Register, 1791–1800, and contributed on subjects of law, politics, and literature, to several periodicals. Townshend, Short Sermons, Lon., 12mo.

Townshend, Rev. Chauncy Hare, b. 1800, was educated at Trinity Hall, Cambridge, where he graduated B.A. in 1821, and M.A. 1824. He obtained the University prize for English verse ("Jerusalem") in 1828. During his last years he lived chiefly at Lausanne, "and thus, though master of one of the most exquisite and luxurious houses in London, adorned by every grace and refinement of hospitality, he passed out of public sight." (Lon. Athen., 1868.) He died in 1868. To Mr. Charles Dickens he bequeathed a sum of money, and many manuscripts, essays, letters, &c., some of which he desired to be published, believing that his religious sentiments would be conducive to the happiness of mankind. Mr. Dickens accordingly published in December, 1869: Religious Opinions of the Rev. Chauncy Townshend; Published, as Directed by his Will, by his Literary Executor, Longmans, p. 8vo, pp. 300. 1. Poems, Lon., 1821, cr. 8vo. Commended by Lon. Mon. Rev., 1822, i. 101, and *Lon. Tregelles, Samuel Prideaux, LL.D., b. Jan. 30, 1813, at Falmouth, Cornwall, was educated at the Classical Grammar-School, Falmouth, from 1825 to 1828; between 1828 and 1831 was engaged in the Iron-Works at Nenth Abbey, Glamorganshire, and 1835-6 was employed in private tuition at Falmouth. In 1850 he received from the University of St. Andrew's the degree of LL.D. 1. Passages in the Book of Revelation connected with the Old Testament Scriptures, Lon., 1836, 8vo. 2. From 1836 to 1813 Dr. Tregelles was engaged in revising the MSS. and superintending the publication of: 1. The Englishman's Greek Concordance to the New Testament, 1839, imp. 8vo; 2d ed., 1844, imp. 8vo, £2 2s.; 1 p., £3 13s. 6d.; Index to, 1845, imp. 8vo, 3s. 4d. 2. The Englishman's Hebrew and Chaldee Concordance to the Old Testament, 1843, 2 vols. imp. 8vo, £3 13s. 6d.; 1 p., £4 14s. 6d. 3. The Book of Revelation in Greek, Edited from Ancient Authorities: with a New English Version and Various Readings, 1844, 8vo. "This very important edition of the Greek Testament has occupied Dr. Tregelles's attention for twenty years; and, as all the existing collations of ancient documents were far from being satisfactory to Biblical scholars, he found it was absolutely necessary that he should personally visit and minutely examine most of the great libraries on the Continent of Europe. Thus he has been able to re-collate almost every ancient document which contains the Greek Testament in whole or in part. The result of this laborious and to Dr. T. very expensive) re-collation has been the acquisition of a very large number of important Various Readings, which had escaped the eye and attention of preceding critical editors of the Greek Testament. A full account of Dr. T.'s collations and critical studies will be found in No. 13, supra. The remainder of this most valuable work is advancing at the press with all practicable rapidity; but from the incessant labour both of the mind and of the eye, in order to secure correctness, its progress must necessarily be slow."—Thos. Hartwell Horne, D.D., to the author of this Dictionary, July 29 1858. See SCRIVENER, FREDERICK HENRY, No. 6.

It will be remembered (see HORNE, THOMAS HARTWELL, D.D., No. 1) that Dr. Tregelles assisted Dr. Horne in vol. iv. of the 10th ed. (11th ed., in 4 vols. 8vo, £3 13s. 6d., was pub. in Nov. 1860, and 13th ed., by the Rev. J. Ayre and Dr. Tregelles, in 4 vols. 8vo, £2 2s., in Mar. 1869) of his Introduction.

"The critical portion of this volume," Dr. Horne writes us, "was written by Dr. T. with great accuracy and perspicuity."

The remainder of the volume (which Dr. Horn's) is very carefully revised and edited by Dr. Tregelles, greatly to Dr. H.'s satisfaction." See also, Lon. Athen., 1850, 1327.

15. Codex Zacynthius. 2. Greek Palimpsest Fragments of the Gospel of Saint Luke obtained in the Island of Zante by the late General Colin Macaulay, and now in the Library of the British and Foreign Bible Society; Deciphered, Transcribed, and Edited by Samuel Prideaux Tregelles, LL.D., 1861, sm. fol. The Palimpsest Fragments of St. Luke are probably of the 6th century; the later writing is a Greek Lectionary of the Four Gospels, belonging (as Dr. T. supposes) to the 13th century.

The Trustees of the British Museum and the Rev. Dr. Cureton lent him their fac-simile types of the Alexandrian MS. (of the same date) now in that library: see BABER, REV. H. H. The English critical journals highly commend the learning and accuracy with which Dr. T. has edited this precious relic. One of the least tolerant of these dreaded censors thus commences its notice of the Codex Zacynthius:

"Among the scholars of this country there is no one to whom we are so much indebted as to Dr. Tregelles for his indefatigable labours in the textual criticism of the New Testament. On the Continent even he has no rival in this respect, with the single exception of Tischendorf. Between them they have collated or re-collated almost every known early MS. of the New Testament or its parts, not working all together, but independently of each other, though occasionally communicating on the subject of their labours."—Lon. Athen., Nov. 1861, 722, (q. r.)

See also, SMITH, WILLIAM, LL.D., Ph. D., (Editor, &c. of the Classical Dictionaries,) No. 4. Among the literary and scientific pensions of 1863 there was awarded to Dr. Tregelles the sum of £100 per annum "on account of his valuable labours on subjects connected with Biblical criticism."

The church of Perranzabuloe, near Perran's Bay, Cornwall, is believed to stand on the site of an ancient British church, its name, in the original Cornish language, signifying "Pieran in the sand." The author labours to show that the English Church has always existed in the western country.

Tricoupi, or Trikupis, Spiridion, the author of a funeral oration on Lord Byron, delivered at Missolonghi, April 21, 1824, and printed by order of the Greek Government, (repub. in Selections from Modern Greek Writers, by C. C. Felton, Camb., Mass., 1856, 12mo,) is said to have been educated at Eton. He is well known as the Greek Ambassador to England from 1838-39, 1842-44, 1852-54; succeeded by Charclaus Tricoupi.

The notices by the same periodical of vols. ii. (1854, 1323) and iv. (1857, 1317) are also highly complimentary, (see, also, 1861, ii. 508,) and so is the notice of vol. i. in Lon. Lit. Gaz., 1853, 1069, and the verdict of Lon. Sat. Rev., 1857.

"The language in which the work is composed may be described as composed entirely of ancient Greek words; but the author has not carried his imitation of ancient Greek so far as to introduce ancient inflections and forms of syntax remote from those of the modern language. The tone of the narrative is dignified and impartial, with perhaps a deficiency in warmth. On the whole, the history must be regarded as a work of great value."—*Knight's Eng. Mr. Trollope has rendered valuable services as Secretary to the [Lincoln] Diocesan Architectural Society, &c.: see Lon. Gent. Mag., 1861, 547.

Trollope, Frances, the daughter of the Rev. William Milton, Fellow of New College, Oxford, was b. at Stapleton, near Bristol, where her father had a curacy, and married in 1809 Thomas Anthony Trollope, (infans), by whom she had six children. She resided about three years (1829–32) in the United States, subsequently travelled extensively on the Continent of Europe, and spent the last ten or twelve years of her life at Florence, where she d. Less favourably noticed in vol. lii. 206.

"Now let us follow the march and observe the course pursued by Mrs. Trollope. She enters the house by the back premises, and takes her quarters for two years together in the kitchen. . . . On the outside of the mansion which she has ventured to paint, she never saw the fifth part. In respect of its interior the Americans are a strict and prudish people. We have, to be sure, a general description of a public hall and private dinner. So far, however, from her having been admitted into the best parlour, the friend of Miss Wright seems, during the three years and a half she stayed among them, to have hardly had an opportunity of exchanging a word with the gentlemen and ladies of the house. . . . Mrs. Trollope's volumes contain as much provocation, whether by commission or omission, as the mere channel of private literature can possibly convey."—*Edin. "Her mistakes are numerous, but rather, we are disposed to think, the fault of her education, . . . and not the result of any inclination on the part of the lady. . . . "Thirty years ago my mother wrote a book about the Americans, to which I believe I may allude as a well-known and successful work without being guilty of any undue family conceit. That was essentially a woman's book. She saw with a woman's keen eye, and described with a woman's light but graphic pen, the social defects and absurdities which our near relatives had adopted into their domestic life. All that she told was worth the telling, and the telling, if done successfully, was sure to produce a good result. I am satisfied that it did so." &c.—ANTHONY TROLLOPE: North America, 1862, Introd., (q. v.)

The whole edition of this work was sold in four months from the date of publication: thus encouraged, the author continued his researches and extended his plan, and, after four years' assiduous application, gave to the public, Trübner's Bibliographical Guide to American Literature; a Classified List of Books published in the United States of America during the Last Forty Years; with Bibliographical Introduction, Notes, and Alphabetical Index; Compiled and Edited by Nicolas Trübner, 1859, 8vo, pp. i.-x., Preface; Introduction: i.-xxxvi., Bibliographical Prolegomena, (in this division Dr. H. E. Ludewig assisted:) xxxvii.-cxxx., Contributions towards a History of American Literature, (by Benjamin Moran:) cxvii.-cxl., Public Libraries of the United States, (by Edward Edwards:) 1-554, Bibliographical Guide and General Index. Of this important publication we have before us commendations from twenty-three periodicals, — nine English, thirteen American, and one French, — all published in 1858-59. Of one of these we claim the authorship, and will only add here that, if it were to be written now, after seven years' diligent use of the Bibliographical Guide, it would be even still more eulogistic. See Trübner & Co.'s Catalogue, 1868, 89; Lon. Reader, 1863, ii. 376; Roosback, Orville A. 3. The Literature of American Aboriginal Languages, by Hermann H. Ludewig; with Additions and Corrections by Professor William W. Turner; Edited by Nicolas Trübner, 1868, 8vo, pp. i.-xxiv., 258. This volume, (complete in itself,) 2422

the first instalment of a projected enlarged edition of Vater's Linguarum totius Orbis Index, has already been noticed in this Dictionary: see LUBEWIG, HENRICH E. That we did not overestimate the importance of the work has been proved since its publication by the attestations of Chevalier Bunsen, Sir George Grey, Thomas Watts, Max Müller, Dr. Buschmann, and twenty-one other authorities,—six English, two Scottish, four American, three French, and six German,—whom want of space forbids us to quote.

Mr. Trübner, we believe, occasionally contributes to periodicals, (see especially his paper on Lucien Bonaparte's Visit to the Basque Provinces in The Critic, Nov. 1, 1856, and Letters in Athenæum, 1856, 42, 75, 683;) but we shall hardly be satisfied without a more enduring record of the results of his linguistic researches.

Trumbull, John, LL.D. b. in Woodbury, Connecticut, April 24, 1750; graduated at Yale College, 1767; tutor at Yale College, 1771 to 1773, when he was admitted to the Connecticut Bar; emigrated to Boston, and became a student in the office of Mr. (afterwards President) John Adams; near the end of 1774 returned to New Haven and commenced the practice of the law; removed to Hartford, 1781; was State Attorney for the county of Hartford, 1789; a member of the Legislature, 1800; Judge of the Superior Court, 1801 to 1819, when he retired to private life; removed to Detroit, 1825, and d. there, May 12, 1831.

Between 1771 and 1773 he contributed many humorous prose and poetical articles to the periodicals of Connecticut and Massachusetts, and, in conjunction with his friend Timothy (afterwards President) Dwight, published a series of papers, more than forty in number, in the manner of The Spectator. He published a poetical satire on the prevailing mode of education, entitled The Progress of Dulness in 1772, (a year later adding the second and third parts); in 1774 appeared, anonymously, his Elegy on the Times,—a poem of sixty-eight stanzas on the Port Bill and other colonial themes; in 1775 he published McFingal, a Modern Epic Poem: Canto First, or The Town Meeting, Philadelphia, 12mo. (London, 1776, 12mo, &c.) and in 1782 gave to the world The Four Cantos in one volume, Hartford, 12mo. In McFingal (composed in Hudibrastic verse) the author proposed to himself to describe,

"in a poetic manner, a general account of the American contest, with a particular description of the characters and manners of the times, interspersed with anecdotes, which no history could probably record or display, and, with as much impartiality as possible, satirize the follies and extravagances of my countrymen as well as of their enemies."—Trumbull's Letter to the Marquis de Chastellux, 1785.

McFingal, who represents the Tories, of course stands very little chance in his logical encounters with Honorary Whigs. The unhappy Scotsman is, from the first, predestined to defeat, disgrace, and "tar and feathers,"—not even beneath his gallingous robes maintains a loyal, if not an undaunted, spirit. The popularity of McFingal was great: "there were more than thirty different pirated impressions, in pamphlet and other forms, which were circulated by 'the news-mongers, hawkers, pedlars, and petty chapmen' of the day." A sixth edition was published in London, 1793, 8vo; a new edition, with Explanatory Notes, appeared Boston, 1826, 18mo; and three editions have appeared within the last few years, viz.: I. Revised and Corrected, with Copious and Explanatory Notes, with a Memoir of the Author, Hartford, 1826, 8vo, pp. 183; II. With Copious Notes, Edited by Benson J. Lossing, N. York, 1860, r. 8vo; l. p., 100 copies; III. With Introduction and Notes by Benson J. Lossing, Hurd & Houghton, Riverside Press, 1864. It is only decorous to cite a few opinions on a production once so famous:

"A poem which will live as long as Hudibras." If I speak freely of this Piece, I can truly say, that altho' it is not equal to itself throughout (and where is the Poem that is so?) yet there are many parts of it equal to any thing in that kind of Poetry that ever was written."—JOHN ADAMS (afterwards President) ADAMS: Letter to John Trumbull, Esq., Antisl., April 26, 1783: Hist. Mag., 1860, 195.

"It may be observed, without any partiality, that McFingal is not inferior in wit and humour to Hudibras, and in every other respect is superior."—FRANCIS DWIGHT.

"McFingal is a successful imitation of Hudibras."—LON. MON., 1793, l. 34, (q. r.)

"A Hudibrastic poem of great merit—for doggerel—rich, bold, and happy."—JOHN NEAL: Bl. Rev. Mag., Feb. 1825, (xvii.) 202.

"A poem in the manner of Hudibras, and in many places hardly inferior to that chief-œuvre of the doggerel satirical."—REV. TIMOTHY DWIGHT: Lon. Ath., 1836, 819.

In conjunction with Joel Barlow, Dr. Lemuel Hopkins, Colonel David Humphreys, &c., Trumbull contributed American Antiquities, Extracts from the Anarchiad, and other papers, to the periodicals: see ALSO, RICHARD HOPKINS, LEMUEL. There has recently been published, The Anarchiad: a New England Poem; Written in Concert by David Humphreys, Joel Barlow, John Trumbull, and Dr. Lemuel Hopkins: Now First Published in Book Form; Edited, with Notes and Appendices, by Luther G. Riggs, New Haven, 1861, 16mo, pp. 120. These papers originally appeared in the New Haven Gazette and Connecticut Magazine. See N. Amer. Rev., Oct. 1861, 537, (by A. P. Peabody, D.D.) In his old age Trumbull was anxious to give to the world a collective edition of his poems; but publishers had little faith in the selling capacity of Revolutionary poetry: at last (he was now about seventy) he found a publisher in S. G. Goodrich, (Peter Parley), who issued in 1820 The Poetical Works of John Trumbull, LL.D., containing McFingal, a Modern Epic Poem, Revised and Corrected, with Copious Explanatory Notes; The Progress of Dulness; and a Collection of Poems on various Subjects, written before and during the Revolutionary War, Hartford, 2 vols. 8vo.

"I paid him," says Mr. Goodrich, "a thousand dollars, and a hundred copies of the work, for the copyright. . . . It did not come up to the public expectation, or the patriotic zeal had cooled, and more than half the subscribers declined taking the work. . . . I quietly pocketed a loss of about a thousand dollars. This was my first serious adventure in patronizing American literature."—Recollections of a Lifetime, 1867, l. 111, 112.

Notices of Trumbull and specimens of his poetry will be found in Grasswell's Poets and Poetry of America; and in Duyckinck's Cyc. of Amer. Lit. See, also, Ann. Reg., vii., and Amer. Quar. Reg., xiv. l.

"Was, no doubt, the most conspicuous literary character of his day, in this country. . . . There was something about him that at once bespoke the man of letters, the poet, and the satirist."—S. G. GOODRICH: Recollections, &c., ii. 115.

Trumbull, John, an eminent artist, a Colonel in the American Revolutionary army, was b. in Lebanon, Connecticut, June 6, 1756; graduated at Harvard College, 1775; d. in the city of New York, Nov. 10, 1843. See William Hogarth, &c.: Essays by G. A. Sala, 1866, p. 8vo. Truett declared that he made £150 per annum by abridging the sermons of old divines, printing them in imitation of MS., and furnishing them to clergymen for pulpit delivery. It is in reference to this that Cowper describes him as one who

"Grinds divinity of other days
Down into modern use, transforms old print
To elegant manuscript, and cheats the eyes
Of gallery critics by a thousand arts. . . .
Grand eater and dry-nurse of the church."

Also commended by Puritan Recorder, (Dr. W. B. Sprague,) Congreg. Jour., Chris. Witness, &c.

Mr. Tucker is co-editor of The Boston Rev. and Boston Recorder, was co-editor of The St. Louis Herald of Religious Liberty, 1847-48, and has contributed to Bibl. Sacra, Home Monthly, Amer. Monthly, National Preacher, &c.

Tucker, Josiah, D.D., b. at Langhorne, Carmarthenshire, 1711, and educated at St. John's College, Oxford; became Curate of St. Stephen's Church, Bristol, 1737; subsequently Minor Canon of the Cathedral, and (1749) Rector of St. Stephen's; Prob. of Bristol, 1756; Dean of Gloucester, 1758; d. 1799. He was the author of several theological works, but owes his reputation to a large number of tracts on subjects of politics and political economy. We notice: 1. The Elements of Commerce and Theory of Taxes, Bristol, 1753, 4to. Privately printed; a few copies only. 2. Six Sermons, 1772, 12mo. 3. Four Tracts, together with Two Sermons, on Political and Commercial Subjects, Gloucester, 1774, 8vo; 3d ed., 1776, 8vo. 4. Tract V., Lon., 1776, 8vo. 5. A Series of Answers, &c., (Tract VI.,) 1776, 8vo. 6. Sixteen Sermons, 1776, 8vo. 7. Treatise concerning Civil Government, in Three Parts, 1781, 8vo. 8. Cui Bono? 1782, 8vo. 9. Reflections on the Present Matters of Dispute between Great Britain and Ireland, 1775, 8vo. The Dean warmly advocated a peaceable separation of the American Colonies from Great Britain.

"A case in which the whole British nation were, in one particular, manifestly puzzle-headed, except one man: who was accordingly derided by all. In the dispute between Great Britain and her American Colonies, . . . Dean Tucker, standing quite alone, wrote a pamphlet to show that the separation would be so lost at all, and that we had best give them the independence they coveted, at once, and in a friendly way. Some thought he was writing in jest, the rest despised him as too absurd to be worth answering. But now (and for above half a century) every one admits that he was quite right, and regrets that his view was not adopted. . . . Of all the clever men, then, that at that time existed, and many of whom spoke eloquently on each side, Tucker was the only one who was not puzzle-headed. And he obtained some small share of late credit, but present contempt."—ARCHBISHOP WHATELY: Bacon's Essays, with Annotations: Of Honour and Reputation. See, also, Edin. Rev., Jan. 1846.

Tuckerman, Samuel Parkman, Mus. Doc., b. in Boston, 1819; received his degree from Dr. Sumner, Archbishop of Canterbury, by special decree, after an exercise in eight real parts was approved by three of the most prominent English musicians. He spent five years in England, engrossed with his musical studies. Among his works are The Episcopal Harp, Cathedral Chants, a collection of psalm and hymn tunes, anthems, chants, &c., including the whole of the music used in Trinity Church, New York, during the time of Dr. Hodges, and three complete morning services, consisting of Te Deum and Jubilate, and Te Deum and Benedictus in the different keys of F, E flat, and C. Mr. Tudor left many valuable MSS.; and we renew the plea ineffectually urged many years since (i.e. in 1851, ut supra) by Josiah Quincy, (b. Feb. 4, 1772; d. July 1, 1864,) that, "at some not far distant day, what remains of his writings will be put in possession of the public." The collection should be prefaced by a copious Memoir, illustrated by notices of Tudor's early contemporaries.

"This play was praised by Charles II., and was acted thirteen days successively at Lincoln's Inn Fields, with great applause. It has several copies of verses prefixed to it by Cowley, Evelyn, and other eminent men of the time. Edward says, 'This is one of the pleasantest stories that ever appeared upon our stage.' Pepys gives a curious notice of its first performance. The house was crowded to suffocation, and, 'by its frequent plaudits, did show their sufficient approbation.' He thought so highly of this drama, that he considered it far superior to Othello!!"—J. Lilly's Cat., (1870,) p. 63, where a copy dated 1664 is priced 15s. Tuke, William, founder of the York Retreat for the Insane, was b. at York, 1732; d. June 6, 1822, aged about 90. 1. Letter from William Tuke (to Reuben Haines) On the Death of John Woolman, (York, 10th mo. 26th, 1772;) Comly's Miscellany, vol. viii. 229, Phila., 1836, 12mo. 2. Several Letters on the Abuses of the York Asylum. See A Complete Collection of the Papers respecting the York Lunatic Asylum, Published Originally in the York Newspapers during the Years 1813, 1814, and 1815. Nil Desperandum, York, 1816, 8vo. See, also, A Memorial of York Monthly Meeting, held the 14th of 5th Month, 1823, concerning William Tuke, (an Elder,) 1823, 8vo.

"The commencement of improvements in the internal management of our lunatic asylums, and the actual treatment of their inmates, may be dated from the foundation of the Retreat by the Society of Friends. It is a curious coincidence that the origin of the Retreat was coeval with the liberation by Pinel of the lunatics of Bicêtre: the two events had no connection. The foundation of the Retreat was suggested by some complaints relative to a female belonging to the Society of Friends, who had been confined and died in York Asylum. It was opened in 1793, under the direction of the Tukes of York, whose name will be handed down among those of the benefactors of mankind."—Lon. Quar. Rev., Oct. 1844, 321.

"About the time when Pinel's great work of reformation was effected in France, and many patients were liberated after being chained for many years, a similar work was providentially commenced in a provincial city of England. . . . Of this admirable asylum the chief promoter was the late William Tuke, of York. . . . And for readers desirous to know the views which ought to prevail in all lunatic asylums, I could not, even now, refer to any work in which they are more perspicuously explained than in Samuel Tuke's account of the Retreat. [See TUKER, SAMUEL, No. 2.] In the valuable works of Pinel and his learned successor Esquirol, we find graphic descriptions of all varieties of mental disorders, and lucid views of treatment; but in none are the details of management, economic, medical, and moral, of an institution for the insane, to be found more convincingly set forth than in the works of Samuel Tuke. . . . All of us who have followed in the path of William and Samuel Tuke, at however great a distance, must ever gratefully acknowledge the extent of our debt to them. It is true that neither they nor Pinel ventured wholly to abolish mechanical coercion: this was left for Charlesworth to attempt, and for Gardiner Hill to carry out at Lincoln, and for Hanwell to confirm on the largest scale; but when the emulation produced by the changes made in asylums during the last twenty years has subsided, every historian of these establishments must point to Pinel and to Tuke as the men who led the way for the more complete system of non-restraint."—Dr. JONAS COVELLY: The Treatment of the Insane without Mechanical Restraints, 1856, deny 8vo.

His friend Erasmus declared that he excelled all his contemporaries in the knowledge of the learned languages, and Sir Thomas More, who knew him well, avows that no man surpassed him in erudition, virtue, and amiability. Pace thus links Tunstall in honourable conjunction with Latimer:

Tupper, Martin Farquhar, D.C.L., eldest son of the late Martin Tupper, Esq., surgeon, was b. in London, 1810; educated at the Charter-House and at Christ Church, Oxford, (where he graduated 1831,) and was subsequently called to the Bar at Lincoln's Inn. Instead of practising law, Mr. Tupper has found a more congenial field in literature. He resides on his handsome country-seat of Albury, in Surrey, the owner of which, it is said, is soon to be complimented by a baronetage. His first volume was a collection of poems, published anonymously in 1822. He has since given to the world: 2. Proverbial Philosophy: A Book of Thoughts and Arguments originally treated, Lon., 1838, 12mo; Second Series, 1842, 12mo; together, 30th ed., 75th 1000, 1857, p. 8vo; 115th 1000, 1865, sq. 16mo. Sale in America to 1863,—edits. 4to, 8vo, 12mo, 16mo, 24mo, and 32mo, in N. York, Boston, Phila., and Rochester,—over 500,000 copies.

Illustrated ed., Lon., 1854, '59, '66, 4to. Library ed., new ed., 1860, cr. 8vo. Pocket ed., new ed., 1866, fp. 8vo. Illustrated ed., Phila., sm. 4to, and N. York, 8vo. In French, Lon., 1851, fp. 8vo. 1853, fp. 8vo; Phila., 12mo. There have been several French translations, by George Metivier, &c.

On the appearance of the first series, the London Athenæum (1838, 287) expressed the opinion that Proverbial Philosophy was not "a book likely to please beyond the circle of a few minds as eccentric as the author's." The unlooked-for popularity of the work, and the later effusions of the successful author, have failed to convert the critics of this periodical to faith in Mr. Tupper's poetical genius: see 1857, 1553; 1860, i. 611, 821; 1861, i. 36, et infra. On the other hand, The London Literary Gazette, in a notice of the 21st edition, remarks that

"The popularity of the 'Proverbial Philosophy' is a gratifying and healthy symptom of the present taste in literature, the book being full of lessons of wisdom and piety, conveyed in a style startling at first by its novelty, but irresistibly pleasing by its earnestness and eloquence."—1855, 739.

Proverbial Philosophy, Third Series, Lon., May, 1868, cr. 8vo.

"A great man once put the wisdom of his life into sayings which the world has chosen to call by this happy name; but from his usage it would seem that a proverb is a short word, a terse and easy phrase, clear to the eye and the mind. The lines in which the Albany Solomon dispenses his eccentric wisdom seem to be of another kind. They are not short. They are not sharp. They are not clear. On the contrary, they are so exceedingly serpentine, so flabby, and so obscure, as to make one doubt whether the Hebrew king was an adept in the lighter branches of his art. He certainly fell far below this imitator in his comical effects. You cannot get a laugh out of Solomon; while in reading Tupper it is just impossible to be grave. Was it not Lord Russell who defined a proverb as the wisdom of many in the wit of one? Mr. Tupper, we suspect, could tell his lordship that a proverb means the 'folly of many for the profit of one'; but in doing so he would have to confess how long he has been laughing at an unuspicious world. . . . On the whole, this third series of 'Proverbial Philosophy' is weak, twaddling, and insincere, and therefore, we suppose, will find the same sort of public which has bought the previous works."—Lon. Athen., May, 1867.

34. Our Canadian Dominion: Half a Dozen Ballads about a King for Canada, 1868, 8vo. With prose comments "to the effect that, as he fears the Canadians may some day wish to separate from the mother-country, he has written these ballads to prevent the catastrophe."

Thus the critics will make game of Mr. Tupper: The Saturday Review, about Jan. 1867, boasted, "With the exception of two young ladies,—both, we may safely state, under twenty,—we never met any one who pleaded guilty to the possession of one of Mr. Tupper's works;" "The English critics," writes one in 1870 "are felicitating themselves on an accident that recently happened to Mr. Martin F. Tupper, by which his right hand was disabled;" "The Round Table, of New York.—I am obliged to confess that my countrymen are not guiltless herein,—late in 1867 thought it 'a matter for no little patriotic exultation that as yet Mr. Tupper's third series' was 'without an American publisher.' Indeed, in 1870 the London Times came to the rescue by the rather tarry suggestion that Mr. Tupper, 'who for considerably more than a quarter of a century has occupied the position of chief butt for metropolitan critics and professional jokers, should be allowed to retire from that disagreeable eminence.'"

But, on the other hand, a number of the admirers of the famous proverbialist not long since (in 1867) exerted themselves to get up a testimonial in his honour; and one of these devotees—who, by the operation of a well-known law, became an imitator of that which he admired,—not perhaps without a willingness to share in the laurels which he was about to bestow—appeals in these soul-stirring—let us hope, pocket-stirring—strains to the gratitude of the nation:

"Give him back a tithe of the cost of those pearls of wisdom: Give it in postage-stamps, or, better, in post-office orders, Or cheque crossed Harries & Co., to account of the minstrel-diver."

N.B. The testimonial's form will probably be as simple As the bard's own simple taste,—namely, paid in cash to his order."—Lon. Spectator.

35. Twenty-one Protestant Ballads; Published from the Rock, 1868, 8vo. Mr. Tupper's Hymn For All Nations, (No. 14, supra), Thanksgiving Hymn, and Trust in God, will be found in Dr. Rogers's Lyræ Britannicæ, 2d ed., 1868, 559-61. He contributed to Our Year, by Walter Severn, 1864, sm. fol.; has written for several periodicals, and used some influence on behalf of The Anglo-Saxon, a short-lived magazine, vol. i., Lon., 1849, 8vo. "The clergy had a great esteem for the author, and consulted him in all matters of moment."—DOB: Church Hist.

Turberville, George, b. at Whitohurch, Devonshire, about 1530, and educated at New College, Oxford, accompanied as secretary Sir Thomas Randolph to Russia, concerning which, see his three poetical epistles in Hakluyt's Voyages, i. 384. He was living in 1594, and is supposed to have d. about 1600.

1. Epitaphes, Epigrams, Songs, and Sonets, &c., Lon., 1567, sm. 8vo. Repub. by J. P. Collier, 1867, 4to. There was an earlier edition. See Collier's Bibl. Acct. of Early English Lit., 1865, ii. 450-53. 1570, sm. 8vo; 1575, 8vo. Repub. in Chalmers's Brit. Poets. See Brydges's Cons. Lit. 2. Heroicall Epistles of the learned Poet Publins Onidius Naso: in English Verse, set out and Translated, 1567, 8vo; 1569, 8vo; 1600, 8vo; also a. a. See Warton's Hist. of Eng. Poet. 3. The Eloges of the Poet B. Mantuan Carmelitan: turned into English Verse, &c., 1567, 12mo. 4. The Booke of Faulconrie, or Hawking, 1575, 4to, with Many New Additions, 1611, 4to: J. Lilly's B. A.-C., 1869, £4 4s. The poem on Hawking, by Gascoigne, was repub. from this, with notes, in Cons. Lit. 5. The Noble Art of Venetrie, or Hunting, 1576, 4to. This is also ascribed to C. Burke and to George Gascoigne. Repub. with additions, 1611, 4to: B. Quaritch's Cat. Jan. 1870, with No. 4, 1611, 4to, £10 10s. See Drake's Shakesp. and his Times, i. 257; Watt's Bibl. Brit. 6. Tragicall Tales, Translated, &c. out of Sundrie Italian, &c., 1578, 16mo; with Epitaphes and Sonnets, 1587, sm. 8vo; with a Prefatory Notice, 50 copies privately printed, Edin., 1837, 4to. J. Lilly's B. A.-C., 1869, cloth, £1 1s. 6d.; calf extra, £2 2s. 7. Essays, Politicall and Morall, 1608, 8vo. Probably his. He left a MS. Translation (now in the Bodleian Library) of Tasso's Jerusalem Delivered. This, which is in the octave stanza, Mr. Wiffen (see his Pref. Dissert. to his own translation) pronounces to occupy, "in merit, a middle station between those of Fairfax and Carew." For other notices of Turberville, see Bliss's Wood's Athen. Oxon., i. 627; Phillips's Theat. Poet. Anglic., by Brydges, 117; Herbert's Ames, 943, 945, 977, 1003, 1164; W. C. Hazlitt's Hand-Book, 616; Dibdin's Lib. Comp., ed. 1826, 695; Ritson's Bibl. Poet., 368; Ellis's Specimens; Bohn's Lowndes, 2719. As a poet, Dr. Drake does not allow him a high place:

"Occasional felicity of diction, a display of classical allusion, and imagery taken from the amusements and customs of the age, are not wanting; but the warmth, the energy, and the enthusiasm of poetry are sought for in vain."—Shakesp. and his Times, i. 458.

Since the publication of Mr. Thornbury's (not eminently successful) Life of Turner the following announcement has been made:

"It is said that the executors of the late Royal Academician Turner are in possession of unpublished letters and papers which illustrate in a new way altogether the details of Turner's life." — Lon. Athen., 1861, n. 690.

"Turner is my great favourite of all the painters here. I went to see his picture yesterday, and was delighted, as I always am with them. He combines the highest poetical imagination with an exquisite feeling for all the truth and individuality of nature; and he has shown that the ideal, as it is called, is not the improving of nature, but the selecting and combining objects that are most in harmony and character with each other." — C. R. Leslie to Miss Leslie, London, Dec. 12, 1816: Autobiog. Recollec., 1860.

"Mr. Ruskin, in a lecture he delivered at Edinburgh, draws a touching picture of the neglect and loneliness in which Turner died. This picture, however, must lose much of its intended effect when it is known that such seclusion was Turner's own fault. No death-bed could be more surrounded by attentive friends than his might have been had he chosen to let his friends know where he lived. He had constantly dinner-invitations, which he seldom even answered, but appeared at the table of the waiter or not, as it suited him. His letters were addressed to him at his house in Queen Ann Street; but the writers never knew where he really resided. . . . It is greatly to be regretted that Turner never would sit for a portrait, excepting when he was a young man, and then only for a profile drawing by Dance. This is, therefore, the only satisfactory likeness of him extant." — C. R. Leslie: Autobiog. Recollec., ch. x.

“His sketch of St. Paul's life and character, in the imposing volume, ‘The Saviour with his Apostles and Prophets,’ edited by Bishop Wainwright, furnishes a specimen of his power to succeed in the more ornate and eloquent style when he saw fit to attempt it. The Chronicle of Eusebius closed the list; and by had several other works nearly ready for the press. Among his manuscripts, his full, exact, and elaborate exposition of Messianic texts; his large notes upon the Gospels; his notes upon the Epistles to the Corinthians, with other portions unfolded, and single difficult passages interpreted, besides many elaborate sermons, involving important discussions, with a memoir of certain passages of his personal theological history, must all combine to furnish much valuable material for future publication.”—REV. DR. S. B. JOHNSON: ubi supra.

16. Autobiography of the Rev. Samuel H. Turner, D.D., 1862, 12mo.

“Dr. Turner stands by common consent at the head of the expositors of Scripture in the Protestant Episcopal Church. In the range and accuracy of his Biblical learning he has no equal in that church, and few in other churches take higher rank.”—Amer. Theolog. Rev., (Presbyterian), Feb. 1860, 174.

“We have more than once expressed our high sense of Professor Turner's merits as a Biblical critic. We can hardly conceive of a nicer mutual equilibrium than exists in his mind between reverence and learning, faith and freedom, loyalty to the voice of revelation, and fearless inquiry as to what that voice actually utters and means.”—A. P. PARSONS, D.D., (Unitarian): N. Amer. Rev., Jan. 1857, 273.

“Dr. Turner and myself have corresponded for at least twenty-five years. He is a ripe and good scholar, and most worthy man. . . . All of his publications are valuable.”—REV. T. H. HORNE, D.D., (Church of England): Letter to S. AUGUST ALLEN, London, Aug. 31, 1858.

Turner, Sharon, b. in London, Sept. 24, 1768, after many years of successful practice as an attorney in the Temple, in 1829 retired to Winchester Hill, where he resided until within a few weeks of his death, which occurred in London, Feb. 13, 1847. See Lon. Gent. Mag., 1847, i, 434, (Obituary.)

He is best known by his History of England from the Earliest Period to the Death of Elizabeth, which consists of the following portions, separately published: 1. "His works, in my fancy, without any presumption, compare with any of the Varro's, Columella's, or Palladius's of Rome."—GROCE.

"Greece set Tusser on a level with Varro and Columella and Palladius; but I would rather compare him to old Hesiod."—STILLINGFLEET.

"It must be acknowledged that this old English Georgic has much more of the simplicity of Hesiod than the elegance of Virgil."—WARREN: Hist. of Eng. Poet., ed. 1810, iii. 252.

"Whether he bought or sold, he lost; and when a scater, impoverished himself and never enriched his landlord. Yet hath he laid down excellent rules in his Book of Husbandry and Huswifery, (so that the observer thereof must be rich,) in his own defence."—FULLER: Worthies, (ut supra).

"The great merit of Tusser's book, independent of the utility of its agricultural precepts, consists in the faithful picture which it delineates of the manners, customs, and domestic life of the English farmer, and in the morality, piety, and benevolent simplicity which pervade the whole. In a poetical light its pretensions are not great."—DR. DRAKE: Shaksp. and his Times, i. 657.

"Such was the ancient farmer's year, which Tusser has described with wonderful spirit, even to the minutest detail, and such were the operations of husbandry that the boy Shakspere would have beheld with interest amidst his native corn-fields and pastures."—CHARLES KNOTT: William Shakspere: a Biography: Pictorial Shakspere, 2d ed., 1867, viii. 55.

"That he [Lord Eldon] had all the natural qualities and all the acquired accomplishments which go to form the greatest legal character is undeniable. To extraordinary acuteness and quickness of apprehension he added a degree of patient industry which no labour could weary, a love of investigation which no harshness in the most uninteresting subject could repulse."—LORD BROUGHAM: States, Time Geo. III., ed. 1866, ii. 59.

"The great element of Lord Eldon's success, both in legal and political life, was the remarkable simplicity, which characterized his moral nature, his intellect, his opinions, and his purposes. Even his prodigious industry, which seemed to rejoice in the accumulation of toils on those which would stupefy men who are accounted laborious, was a subordinate power to this singleness of being and aim."—SIR T. Tyndale, or Tindale, William, otherwise Hitchins, the Reformer, translator, and martyr, was b. about 1477 to 1484, according to Foxe about the borders of Wales, according to other biographers at Hlunt's Court, parish of Nibley, Gloucestershire, and was educated at Oxford and Cambridge. After acting as tutor to the children of Sir John Welch, where he exposed himself to danger by his advocacy of the doctrines of the Reformation, he came to London, unsuccessfully sought admission into the household of Cuthbert Tunstall, Bishop of London, and subsequently became an inmate of the family of Humphrey Mummeth or Monmouth, (a merchant and alderman,) who entertained him for six months and then settled upon him ten pounds per annum to support him in Germany. Settling at Antwerp, he busied himself in a translation of the

New Testament from the Greek into English, the publication of which exposed him to a savage persecution, which resulted in his being strangled and burnt for heresy, under an imperial decree, at Vilvoorden, six miles from Brussels, October 6, 1536. He was the author of a number of theological works, already noticed: see Fox, or FOXE, JOHN; FRITH, or FRITH, JOHN; RUSSELL, THOMAS. Since Russell's publication, new editions of Tyndale have appeared, viz.: I. Doctrinal Treatises, and Introductions to Different Portions of the Holy Scriptures; Edited for the Parker Society by the Rev. Henry Walter, B.D., F.R.S., Camb., 1848, 8vo. II. Expositions and Notes on Sundry Portions of the Holy Scriptures, together with the Practices of Prelates; Edited for the Parker Society by the Rev. H. Walter, 1849, 8vo. III. An Answer to Sir Thomas More's Dialogue: The Supper of the Lord after the True Meaning of John 6 and 1 Cor. 11; and William Tracy's Testament Expounded, 1830, 8vo. See, also, Richmond's Fathers, i. 1; Tracts of Angl. Fathers, ii. 7.

Of Tyndale's translation of the New Testament the first quarto edition was printed, it is believed, in 1525, and, it would appear, at Cologne, in the office of Peter Quentell, finished at Worms by Peter Schoeffer. Only a fragment of a copy, 31 leaves, (in the Grenville collection, British Museum,) is known to be in existence. The first octavo edition, 1525 or 1526, (of which only two copies, one in the Baptist Museum, Bristol, the other in the Library of the Chapter of St. Paul's,—both imperfect,—are known to be extant,) is supposed to have been printed at Worms by Peter Schoeffer: Reprinted, with a Memoir of Tyndale's Life and Writings, &c., by George Offor, Lon., (S. Bagster,) 1836, cr. 8vo; 1 p., sm. 4to. A copy with red borders to every page, the portrait painted, initials illuminated, Luscumbe, in 1851, morocco joints, in a mahogany box, £7 7s. See Lon. Gent. Mag., 1837, i. 176, 1851, ii. 303; DARNEY, J. P. There is a lithographic fac-simile reprint of this first octavo edition, with an Introduction by Francis Fry, F.S.A., Bristol, printed for the Editor, 1862, sm. 8vo, £8, 177 copies, of which 26 are in quarto. A few copies are on old paper, a few on vellum, and a few illuminated like the original one in the Baptist College.

"Though it is far from a perfect translation, yet few first translations will be found preferable to it. It is astonishing how little obsolete the language of it is, even at this day; and in point of perspicuity and noble simplicity, propriety of idiom, and purity of style, no English version has yet approached it."—DR. ALEX. GORDON: Prospect, for a New Trans. of the Holy Bible, 1788, 4to, 88.

QUARLES.

"Tyndale's translation of the New Testament is the most important philological monument of the first half of the sixteenth century, perhaps I should say of the whole period between Chaucer and Shakespeare, both as a historical relic, and as having more than any thing else contributed to shape and fix the sacred dialect and establish the form which the Bible must permanently assume in an English dress."—Geo. P. MARSH: Lects. on the English Language, 1860, Lect. V. See, also, Lects. VII., XII., XVIII., and Note, XXVI., XXVIII., and XXX.

Tyndale's translation, with his latest revisions, (1534, 12mo,) was republished in The English Hexapla, 1841, 4to, (Bagster.) See, also, A Collation of Tyndale's Version [1534] with the Authorized Version [1611] of the New Testament, by Wilmot Marsh, Chester, 1848, 8vo, and The Gothic and Anglo-Saxon Gospels in Parallel Columns, by J. Bosworth, D.D., Lon., 1865, 8vo.

His translation of The Pentateuch into English was Emprinted at Mariborow in the Land of Hesse, in the Vere of our Lorde MCCCCXXX. A copy which had been Heber's was resold, Gardner, July, 1854, for £150; and another copy, (see Amer. Pub. Circ., Aug. 1, 1863, 271, by J. Sabin,) at Bishop Daly's sale, Sothoby, June 26, 1858, for £150.

At his mountain retreat near Edinburgh he exercised a liberal hospitality,—it would appear, greatly to the profit of his guests:

"Mr. Mackenzie, returning from his lordship's literary retirement, meeting Mr. Alison, finely said that he hoped he was going to Woodhouselee; for no man could go there without being happier, or return from it without being better."

Tytler, Alexander Fraser, third son of the preceding, rose to eminence in India, and facilitated honourable imitation by his Considerations on the Present Political State of India, &c., intended chiefly as a Manual of instruction in their Duties for the Servants of the Company, Lon., 1815, 2 vols. 8vo; 2d ed., 1816, 2 vols. 8vo.

Mr. Tytler undertook this work at the request of Sir Walter Scott, who reviewed (with mingled censure and praise) vols. i. and ii. in the Quarterly Review for November, 1823, 328-59, and "meant to criticise the work throughout in similar detail." (Lockhart: Life of Scott, ch. lviii. n.) In his History of Scotland, Sir Walter remarks that "the tenor of the work in general reflects the highest honour on Mr. Tytler's talents and industry." Vol. vii. was reviewed in the same periodical for March 1841, 303-44, by Lord Mahon, who predicted that the work would "become, and long remain, the standard history of Scotland." See, also, Dec. 1839, 53.

"He possesses in a very high degree many of the qualities of a great historian—Indefatigable in industry, accurate in detail, trustworthy in spirit, he unites with these qualities—which are the foundation of history—the poetic temperament and fervent spirit which are essential to the superstructure. . . . The defect of his work . . . is that it contains too many quotations from original documents, or letters, in the text."—SIR ARCHIBALD ALISON: Hist. of Europe, 1815-1852, ch. v.

He wrote a number of songs adapted to his own voice, and with these, and a ready and nimble wit, was wont to delight his friends. In politics he was a Conservative; in religion, an Episcopalian. In 1844 he was complimented by a royal pension of £200 per annum for "literary services to the country." Notices of Mr. Tytler, a worthy son of a worthy sire, will be found in Chambers's and Thomson's Biog. Dict. of Em. Scots., ed. 1855, v. 583-90, and in Encyc. Brit., 8th ed., xxi., 1859, 412-15. Udall was not unwilling to reward his boys by penning plays for their performance; but one of the most famous of his pupils, Thomas Tusser, bears plaintive evidence that in handling the rod he was, at least on one memorable occasion, equal to his famous Westminster successor, Dr. Busby:

"From Paudes I went, to Eton sent,
To learn straightw-edges the Latin phrases,
Where fiftie-three stripes given to me
At once I had
The fault but small, or none at all,
It came to pass thus heat I was;
See, Udall, see, the merits of thee
To me, poore but!"

Upcott was one of the compilers of A Biographical Dictionary of Living Authors of Great Britain and Ireland, 1816, 8vo, which has been ascribed (see Notes and Queries, x. 451, xi. 31) to John Watkins and Frederick Shoberl, and also to the Rev. David Rivers, of Highgate, London. Now, as the publisher's advertisement (before us) states that "several eminent men have together bestowed a laborious application of three years in the compilation of the Dictionary," it is quite likely that each of the above had a hand in it. In Bohn's Lowndes, Part 1, (1857,) 205, A-C are ascribed to Upcott, and the remainder to Shoberl.

A learned account of the Apostles' Creed. 11. De Mæcedonum et Asianorum Anno Solari, &c., 1648, 8vo. See No. 12. 12. Annales Veteris et Novi Testamenti, à prima Mundi Origine deducti ad Iulian Imperian Vespasian, Lon., 1650-54, 2 vols. fol. (In English, 1658, fol.) Idem, aecedunt ejusdem J. Usseri Tractatus duo, viz.: Chronologia Sacra Veteris Testamenti; Dissertatio de Mæcedonum et Asianorum Anno Solari: cum Indicibus, Opera et Studio A. Lubini, Paris, 1673, fol. (with a fine brilliant portrait by Landry.) Idem, aecedunt tria ejusdem Opuscula de Chronologia Veteris Testamenti: de Mæcedonum et Asianorum Anno Solari; et de Romanæ Ecclesiæ Symbolo Apostolicæ Veteris, abisque Fidei Formulæ: una cum Vita, à Tho. Smitho conscripta, Genevæ, 1722, fol., some l. p. Optima edita. The only addition to the Geneva ed. is the Distributio Symboli: otherwise the Paris and Geneva edits. are the same, the latter ed. having taken the indexes from Lubin's ed. Each of the edits. contains all of Usher's chronological works. Other edits.: Brunæ, 1686, fol.; Veronæ, 1741, fol. The chronology of Usher is followed in the margins of our larger Bibles.

"I have with no small eagerness and delight turned over those your learned and accurate Annals, wondering not a little at that your indefatigable labour which you have bestowed on a work fetched together out of such a world of monuments of antiquity; whereby your Grace hath better merited the title of Xaλκνρετρος and φιλολογος than those on whom it was formerly bestowed."—BISHOP HALL to Archbishop Usher, on the receipt of a copy ex dono auctoris.

"Along with the reading of the historical books of the Scripture I would recommend Usher's Annals, which is a work perfect in its kind, and which well digested will give a very sound knowledge of the history of the world, sacred and profane, to the destruction of the second temple; which knowledge will upon innumerable occasions be of unspeakable use."—DR. WOTTON: Thoughts, &c. of Studying Divinity.

"This book is indispensable to the study of sacred chronology. There is none like it in the English language. Its value cannot be too highly appreciated."—DR. K. DIVINSON.

"This is a work of great labour and research, which has been followed by the greater part of modern chronologists, though the system of Dr. Hales (see Hales, Wm., D.D., No. 2) is perhaps more correct."—ORME'S Bibl. Bib., 442.

"This has been the chronology generally adopted by English historians, as well as by Bossuet, Calmet, and Rollin, so that for many years it might be called the orthodox scheme of Europe. No former annals of the world had been so exact in making dates and connecting sacred history with profane. It was, therefore, exceedingly convenient for those who, possessing no sufficient leisure or learning for these inquiries, might very reasonably confide in such authority."—HALLAM: Lit. Hist. of Europe, 4th ed., 1854, iii. 256.

"having met with Stapleton's Fortress of Faith, he tasked himself to read the Fathers thoroughly, being resolved to examine the truth of that learned Author's quotations from them. He spent eighteen years in this study without interruption, only by way of refreshment spending some hours occasionally in searching into and collecting the antiquities of his country. . . . In prosecuting this study, his method was to make notes and observations upon their writings, taking them in order, and making the passages which were genuine, and which spurious and forged. In this compass of time he not only read the Greek and Latin Fathers, but most of the considerable Schoolmen and Divines from the first to the thirteenth century. He intended to have published these collections under the title of Bibliotheca Theologica, after a book of that title published by one Johannes Molanus Professor of Divinity at Louvain."—Biog. Brit., 2d ed., vol. vi., Part I. (1763,) 406-7.

The MS. of this work he confided on his death bed to Dr. Gerard Langhorne, (p. 1057, supra;) but he also died without completing it. Dean Fell then endeavoured, but in vain, to have it prepared for the press; and it now reposes in the British Museum. Will not the syndics of the Dublin University Press confide it to a competent editor and give it to the world, from which it has too long been withheld?

We have omitted one reference, and an important one: in Blount's Censura Cæcibrorum Auctorum, 1590, fol. 701-4, will be found many eulogies (chiefly in Latin and from foreign scholars) on the erudition of the great archbishop. It is asserted that he was solicited to accept a professor's chair at Leyden, and was invited by Cardinal Richelieu to settle in France, with a promise of protection in the exercise of his religion.

"The writings of our Irish primate Usher, who maintained the antiquity of his order, but not upon such high ground as many in England would have desired, are known for the extraordinary learning, in which he has perhaps never been surpassed by an English writer. But for judgment and calm appreciation of evidence the name of Usher has not been altogether so much respected by posterity as it was by his contemporaries."

don, Aug. 14, 1863, for £22 15s.: see Lon. Reader, 1863, ii. 199.

Usher, James, a descendant of the preceding, b. about 1720, in the county of Dublin, was successively a farmer, a linen-draper, a priest of the Church of Rome, and a school-teacher, (for a time in partnership with Mr. John Walker, author of the Pronouncing Dictionary, &c.) and d. 1772. 1. New System of Philosophy, founded on the Universal Operations of Nature, Lon., 1764, 8vo. He censures Locke, as leaning too much towards naturalism. 2. Clio; or a Discourse on Taste: addressed to a Young Lady, 1772, 2 vols. 8vo. To this was subsequently added an Introduction to the Theory of the Human Mind, which Thomas Green tells us (see his Extracts from the Diary of a Lover of Lit., 1810, 128) he "read with much interest." 3. An Elegy, &c., 8vo. Vallancey, (originally Vallence,) Charles, LL.D., b. 1722, General in the Engineer Department of the Royal Army, 1803, d. at Dublin, Aug. 1812, although by birth an Englishman, is best known as an enthusiastic student of the antiquities of Ireland, where he resided the greater part of his life. 1. Essay on Fortification; from the French, Duhl., 1757, 8vo. 2. The Field Engineer; from the French of M. le Chevalier de Clairac, &c., Duhl., 1759, 8vo; 1760, 8vo. 3. Collectanea de Rebus Hibernicis, 8vo, 1770-1804, Parts 1-14, bd. in 4 vols., followed by vols. v. and vi. Some copies of vol. i. (bound) are dated 1786. It consists of treatises (by Vallancey, the editor, and others) on Irish coins, the literature, geography, history, and other antiquities of the country. See Bohn's Londres, 2749. It is not without value, but must not be relied on as a guide.

"It is a difficult and rather unpleasant task to follow a writer so rambling in his reasonings and so obscure in his style: his hypotheses are of a visionary nature."—GEORGE PATRICK.

Vallancey (vol. vi.) disagrees with Petrie, and agrees with O'Brien, in his view of the Round Towers of Ireland.

"I had heard a good deal of the wild fancies of this book, but never read it before. At first it rather amused me; but after getting through a volume I was oppressed by weariness."—SIR J. MACINTOSH: Lit. &c. i. ch. ix., (1808.)

Valpy, Abraham John, second son of the Rev. Richard Valpy, D.D., after a thorough classical education under his father and at Pembroke College, Oxford, became a publisher and bookseller in London, and continued his business with great success until 1837 or 1838, when he retired to private life. He died in St. John's Wood Road, London, Nov. 19, 1851, in his 68th year.

Among the works edited and published by him are the following: Edited in the original: 1. Epistles of Cicero, 1804, 12mo; 2d ed., 1810; 3d ed. 2. Broet's Tacitus, 1812, 5 vols. 8vo; 1. p., r. 8vo; new ed., 1839, 4 vols. 8vo; in English, 3 vols. p. 8vo. 3. Virgil, 1814, 8vo; 2d ed., 1817. 4. Horace, 1814, 12mo. 5. Sallust, 1817, 12mo. 6. Terence, 1817, 12mo. 7. The Pamphleteer, Mar. 1813—Dec. 1828, 8vo, 58 Parts, in 29 vols. 8. 16. Anectores Classici Latini, cum Notis Variorum et in Usum Delphini, 1819-50, 141 vols. 8vo, £145 7s.; 1. p., 1. 8vo, 28s. guineas. See DYER, GEORGE. A list of the authors in this collection will be found in the Supplement to Moss's Classical Manual.

"We allude to a precious scheme of Mr. Valpy's, now in progress, of republishing the very worst edition of the Latin Classics. This indefatigable and zealous printer does not seem to have had the remotest idea that the value of the original Delphine editions consisted almost entirely in their scarcity.—a merit which his own publication of course cannot possess. The Regent Classics are minute volumes, with short prefaces in bad Latin by a Mr. Carolus Cotta."—HISLOP BLONFIELD: Lon. Quar. Rev., xxii. (Jan. 1850) 302, n.

At the end of the Preface to the collection is a Latin tribute to Mr. Dyer for his great industry and critical acumen.

"The unhappy subscriber finds he has got only two-thirds of Cicero,—the very author on whose name rests the literary character of the Augustan age." See Lon. Gent. Mag., ubi infra.

Vanbrugh, Sir John, a descendant of a Flemish family, was b., according to the memoir prefixed to the collection of his plays, 1759, 2 vols. 12mo, in the parish of St. Stephen's, Wallbrook, London, 1666; entered the army as an ensign at the age of nineteen, and rose to the rank of captain; was for some time imprisoned in the Bastille; by the nomination of the excellent John Evelyn, was made Secretary to the Commissioners for completing Greenwich Hospital, 1695; Clarenceux King-at-Arms, 1705-26; knighted, 1714; Comptroller of the Royal Works, Jun. 6, 1714-15; Surveyor of the Works at Greenwich Hospital, Aug. 17, 1716; d. Mar. 26, 1726. Vanbrugh acquired distinction as a dramatic author and as an architect. The plays—all comedies, save The Country House, which is a farce—which appeared under his name are the following: 1. The Relapse; or, Virtue in Danger, 1697, 4to. Altered by Sheridan, 1777, to A Trip to Scarborough, 1781, 8vo. 2. The Provok'd Wife, 1697, 4to. 3. Æsop, in two Parts, 1697, 4to. Plot from the French. 4. The Pilgrim, 1700, 4to. From Fletcher. 5. The False Friend, 1702, 4to. 6. The Confederacy, 1705. Plot from the French of Dancour. 7. The Convent, 1706. Not printed. Adapted from Molière. 8. Squire Treeloby, 1706. Pub. 1734, 8vo. Adapted from Molière. 9. The Mistake, 1706, 4to. Adapted from Molière. 10. The Country House, (1715,) 12mo. 11. A Journey to London: left unfinished: completed by Cibber, (who assures us that he did not alter a word of the original,) and published as The Provoked Husband, 1728, 8vo. Collective editions of his Plays, (to those of 1759 and 1776 an Account of his Life and Writings was prefixed,) each in 2 vols. 12mo, were published in 1780, 1735, 1759, and 1776. See, also, CONGREVE, WILLIAM; FARQUHAR, GEORGE: this volume was first published in 1840, r. 8vo. To Vanbrugh's Short Vindication of The Relapse and The Provoked Wife from Immorality and Profaneness, by the Author, 1698, 8vo, and the response to it, we have already alluded, (COLLIER, JEREMY, p. 400.) That neither the "Author" nor any other champion could successfully "vindicate" the indecency of these pieces will be readily granted. In his Æsop, and A Journey to London, he seems disposed to make some atonement for his offences against morality and common propriety.

"Sir John Vanbrugh has spirit, wit, and ease; but he is to the last degree gross and indelicate. He is one of the most in-moral of all our comedians. His 'Provoked Wife' is full of such indecent sentiments and allusions as ought to explode it out of all reputable society. His Relapse is equally censurable; and these are his only two considerable pieces."—DR. BEAR, Lects. on Rhet. and Belles-Lettres, Lect. XLVII.

"Vanbrugh, who wrote with more nature and fire, though with more faultless art and precision, (than Congreve)."—BROOK-LETT: Hist. of England: George I. Notes.

"Vanbrugh and Farquhar, inferior to Congreve in real wit, and falling into the next period, were perhaps his equals in the composition of acting plays."—SIR WALTER SCOTT: Essay on the Drama, in Enryc. Brit., and in his Prose Works.

"Vanbrugh comes next, and holds his own fully with the best. He is no writer at all, as to more authorship; but he makes up for it by a prodigious fund of comic invention and ludicrous description, bordering on caricature. Though he did not borrow from him, he was much more like Molière in genius than Wycherley was, who professedly imitated him. He has none of Congreve's graceful refinement, and as little of Wycherley's serious manner and studied insight into the springs of character; but his exhibition of it in dramatic contrast and unlooked-for situations, where the different parties play upon one another's failings and into one another's hands, keeping up the jest like a game at battledore and shuttlecock, and urging it on to the utmost verge of breathless extravagance, in the mere eagerness of the fray, is beyond that of any other of our writers."—HALLAM: Lects. on the Eng. Comic Writers, Lect. IV.: On Wycherley, Congreve, Vanbrugh, and Farquhar.

"In humorous conception our admirable play The Provoked Husband, the best parts of which are due to Vanbrugh, seems to equal any thing he [Molière] has left. . . . The Relapse and The Provoked Wife of Vanbrugh have attained a considerable reputation. In the former, the character of Ananda is interesting; especially in the momentary wavering and quick recovery of her virtue. This is the first homage that the theatre had paid, since the Restoration, to female chastity; and, notwithstanding the vicious tone of the other characters, in which Vanbrugh has gone as great lengths as any of his contemporaries, we perceive the beginnings of a reaction in public spirit which gradually reformed and elevated the moral standard of the stage. The Provoked Wife, though it cannot be said to give any proofs of this sort of improvement, has some merit as a comedy; it is witty and animated, as Vanbrugh usually was; the character of Sir John Brute may not have been too great a caricature of real manners such as survived from the debased reign of Charles, and the endeavour to expose the grossness of the older generation was itself an evidence that a better polish had been given to social life."—HALLAM: Lat. Hist. of Europe, 4th ed., 1864, iii. 514, 528.

"Vanbrugh almost as great a genius as ever lived. Sir John Brute—'And this woman will get a husband!' Confederacy, from the French with so much the air of an original! Who would have thought it?"—CHARLES JAMES FOX, Recollec. by S. Rogers, 1850, 32.

"How Van wants grace, who never wanted wit!"—POPE.

As an architect Sir John is best and most favourably known by the lofty piles of Blenheim and Castle Howard. His edifices did not escape the witteisms of the satirists of the day, and the poetical shafts of Dean Swift and Dr. Abel Evans (p. 564, supra) formed a permanent lodgment, from which they will never be displaced, in his castle-walls. But the "goose pie" and the "mouse-trap" similitudes of the former were far less happy than Evans's famous epitaph:

"Lie heavy on him, Earth, for he Laid many a heavy load on thee!"

But in some of these "heavy loads" great merits have been recognized:

"To speak of Vanbrugh in the language of a painter, he had originality of invention; he understood light and shadow, and had great skill in composition. . . . Vanbrugh's fate was that of the great Porriani. Both were the objects of the petulant sarcasms of factious men of letters, and both have left some of the latest monuments which, to this day, decorate their several countries,—the facade of the Louvre, Blenheim, and Castle Howard."—SIR JOHN A. REYNOLDS: Works.

"The heaviness and enormity of Blenheim Castle have been greatly criticised; perhaps too severely. We may be too much bigoted to Greek and Roman architecture. . . . What made Vanbrugh ridiculous was his applying to small houses a style of architecture which could not possibly succeed but in a large one. In a small house, where the grandeur of a whole cannot be attempted, the eye is at leisure to contemplate parts, and meets with frequent occasion of disgust."—WILLIAM GILPIN: Observations on the Mountains and Lakes of Cumberland and Westmoreland.

"Vanbrugh's faults were generally those of Michael Angelo: He was a painter's architect, and did not understand beauty of proportion and detail so well as the pictorial arrangement of lights and shadows; to produce which, in the inveniente, it is almost necessary to part with all the higher beauties of architecture."—PROF. WILLIAM HOOKING, of King's College, London: Enryc. Brit., 8th ed., iii. 1853, 465, art. Architecture.

Vane, Sir Henry, the Younger, son of Sir Henry Vane, of Hallow, Kent, was b. 1612; became a gentleman commoner of Magdalen College, Oxford, about 1628; gave offence to the court and church by his puritanical tendencies, and in consequence thereof emigrated to New England, 1635, was elected Governor, 1636, and returned to England, 1644; made Co-treasurer and subsequently sole Treasurer of the Navy, which office, then worth £30,000 per annum, he voluntarily relinquished; knighted and M.P., 1640; became a leader of the Independents, but disapproved of the military dictation to Parliament, and of the execution of Charles I.; opposed Cromwell, and by him was imprisoned in Carisbrook Castle; unjustly sentenced and executed for high treason, at the instigation of the despicable Charles II., June 11, 1662. He was the author of a number of theological and political works, of which a list will be found in Upham's Life of Vane, (see UPHAM, CHARLES WESTWORTH), 401-3. Among these are: 1. The Retired Man's Meditations; or, The Mystere and Power of Godliness shining forth in the Living World, &c., Lon., 1655, 4to.

"An obscure book on the mystery of Godliness, of which all that we understand is excellent, and we may, therefore, infer that the vein of the rest is good."—GEORGE BUCKLEY, N. Amer. Rev., xxxviii 128 q. v. for a vigorous defence of Vane against the charge of Unitarianism.

2. Of the Love of God and Union with God, 1657, 4to.

"I was of opinion that the subject-matter of it was of so delicate a nature that it required another kind of preparation of mind, and, it may be, another kind of diet, than men are ordinarily supplied with."—EARL OF CLARENDON.

When he died,—it is the eulogium of an eminent living historian,—"one of the greatest and purest of men that ever walked the earth, to adorn and elevate his kind, had left the world which was not worthy of him." (John Forster.)

"This man, so celebrated for his parliamentary talents and for his capacity in business, has left some writings behind him: they treat, all of them, of religious subjects, and are absolutely unfathomable. No traces of eloquence, or even of common sense, appear in them."—HUME: Hist. of Eng., ch. lxiii. See, also, chap. lvi. and lxvii.

"The royalists have spoken of Vane with extreme dislike; yet it should be remembered that he was not only incorrupt, but disinterested, inflexible in conforming his public conduct to his principles, and averse to every sanguinary or oppressive measure: qualities not very common in revolutionary chiefs, and which honourably distinguished him from the Lamberts and Hasleriges of his party."—HALLAM: Lit. Hist. of Europe, 4th ed., 1864, n. 326.

"Sir Henry Vane was one of the most profound minds that ever existed,—not inferior, perhaps, to Bacon. Milton has a fine sonnet addressed to him,—

"Vane, young in years, in sage experience old.
His works, which are theological, are extremely rare, and display astonishing powers. They are remarkable as containing the first direct avowal of the liberty of conscience. He was put to death in a most perfidious manner."—SIR J. MACKINTOSH: Conversations with A. H. Everett: N. Amer. Rev., xxxv 418, n.

A biographical sketch of Mr. Vaux (with portrait) was published in the Democrat. Rev., xxi. 167.

Vaux, Roberts, the descendant of an ancient family which he emigrated to England (where the name had long been eminent: see VAUX, LAURENCE; VAUX, THOMAS, LORD VAUX) in 1600, b. in Philadelphia, Jan. 21, 1786, at an early age devoted himself to those philanthropic pursuits which enlisted his zealous interest during the whole course of his active and most useful life. To his freely-conferred and self-denying exertions the causes of public education, the maintenance and instruction of the blind, deaf, and dumb, the care of the insane, prison-discipline, the relief and employment of the poor, the reformation of the vicious, and other excellent objects were more largely indebted than to any other citizen of his native State. Nor should his interest in the subjects of internal improvements and penal codification—on which he corresponded with De Witt Clinton and Edward Livingston—and agriculture fail of an honourable record. For a short time before, and at the time of, his death, Jan. 6, 1836, he was one of the Associate Justices of the Court of Common Pleas. Judge Vaux was a member of the religious Society of Friends.

 "Roberts Vaux, well known in his life for intelligent philanthropy and active benevolence, and not forgotten now."—SIR GEORGE FISHER: Oration on the Centen. Anniv. of the Foundation of Germantown Academy, April 21, 1860, 1860, 8vo, 19.

Of this excellent man it may truly be said that "he delivered the poor that cried, and the fatherless, and him that had none to help him: the blessing of him that was ready to perish came upon him, and he caused the widow's heart to sing for joy." Let the names of such be held in everlasting remembrance.

Vaux, Vaulx, or Vaus, Thomas, Lord Vaux of Harwedon, the son of Lord Nicholas Vaux, (q. v.), to whom his poems have incorrectly been ascribed, attended Cardinal Wolsey in his embassy to the Emperor Charles V. in 1527; took his place in Parliament as a Baron, 1530; accompanied Henry VIII. to Calais and Boulogne, 1532; Knight of the Bath, 1533; surrendered the office of Captain of the island of Jersey, 1536; d. early in the reign of Philip and Mary. Brydges and Ritson hint that, after all, it may be William, Lord Vaux, (eldest son of this nobleman,) who was really the poet known as Lord Vaux. But the current of critical opinion runs in favour of Lord Thomas. A number of Lord Vaux's poems will be found in Tottell's Surrey, (see HOWARD, HENRY, No. 1.) The Paradise of Daynty Devises, 1576, &c. (see EDWARDS, RICHARD,) and later collections, (see below.) Among the best-known of his pieces are The Assault of Cupid, The Aged Lover Renounceth Love, No Pleasure without some Paine, Of the Instability of Youth, Of a Contented Minde, Of Being Asked the Occasion of his White Hende.

B.) was intended to counteract Antinomian principles; the New Whole Duty of Man—which Bickersteth (ubi infra) styles "a very dangerous and unsound book"—was designed to refute its predecessor; whilst (according to Bickersteth)

"In Venn's Complete Duty of Man we return again to the principles of the Reformation. It exhibits clearly justification by faith, and the vital doctrines of the gospel. But, though doctrinally an improvement, it is yet defective as a complete substitute in the statement of practical duties."—Christian Student, 4th ed., 328.

Pub., xxxvi.) So far as regards literary merit, Vergil perhaps stands at the head of the English Latin historians.

"Polydore Vergil was the most accomplished writer for elegance and clearness of style that this age afforded. So much the severest enemy he had his acknowledged of him; and on this score alone some have unreasonably extolled him. But there is so little of the other more necessary qualifications of a good historian—truth and fair dealing—in all his twenty-six books, that he has been justly condemned by our critics; and it is no wonder that some of them have expressed an indignation suitable to the abuses put upon their country."—Baker Nicolson, Eng. Hist. Lib., ed. 1776, 87. See, also, 31, 102, 152.

"Polydorus, ut homo Italus, et in robis nostri Homines, et (quod caput est) neque in Republica versatus, nec magni aliqui, vel iudicii, vel ingenii; paucæ ex multis delibans, et falsa plerumque pro veris amplexus, Historiam nobis reliquit, cum cetera mendaciam, tum exitium sanæ, et recte conscriptum."—SIR HENRY BAKER: Epist. Ded. ad 3 Script. post Italiam.

Humphrey Lloyd and others also attack Vergil, and Caius (De Antiq. Cantab.) states it as a thing "not only reported, but even certainly known, that Polydore Vergil, to prevent the discovery of the faults in his History, most wickedly committed as many of our ancient and manuscript histories to the flames as a wagon could hold." According to another account,—we vouch for neither of these stories,—he sent the original documents from which he prepared his History to Rome. His History was undertaken at the command of Henry VIII. It is thought to be unjust to the Reformers. Bale says that Vergil, though a Roman Catholic, approved of the marriage of ecclesiastics and disapproved of the worship of images. Passages in his book De Rerum Inventoribus are condemned in the Indices Librorum Prohibitorum et Expurgatorum. He published the first ed. of Gildas's Epistola: see GILDAS. See Genl. Vernon, Thomas, a lawyer, and, according to Lord Kenyon, "the ablest man in his profession," was at one time secretary to the Duke of Monmouth, and subsequently M.P. for Whitechurch, 1710, '13, '14, and '22. He d. at his seat, Twickenham Park, Aug. 22, 1726. After his death the MSS. of his Reports became the subject of a suit in chancery (see Atherley v. Vernon, in 10 Mod., 529, 530) between his widow, his residuary legatee, and his heir-at-law: therefore, by order of Lord Macaulay and King, the papers were confided to the editorial care of William Melmoth and William Peere Williams for publication. They appeared as follows: Reports of Cases in Chancery from 23 Ch. II. to 5 Geo. I., Lon., 1726-28, 2 vols. fol.; again, 1736, 2 vols. fol. This edition was so inaccurate that, at the suggestion of Lord Eldon, Mr. John Raithby published a new edition, 1806-7, 3 Parts, 2 vols. r. 8vo; 3d ed., 1828, 2 vols. r. 8vo; Brookfield, 1829, 2 vols. 8vo. Lord Eldon (16 Vesey, Jr., 24) says Raithby's Vernon is a very valuable edition.

"The volumes have, therefore, much more value now than when first published: but . . . they are often extremely meagre and incorrect."—Wallace's Reporters, ed. 1855, 310, (q. n.)

"Vernon's Reports are the best of the old reports in chancery. . . . In 1806 Mr. Raithby favoured the profession with a new and excellent edition of Vernon. . . . These reports include part of the judicial administration of Lord Nottingham and the whole of the time of Lord Somers: but they give us nothing equal to the reputation of those great men. They bring the series of equity decisions down to the conclusion of Lord Chancellor Cowper's judicial life."—1 Kent, Com., 492.

Villiers, Rt. Hon. Charles Pelham, M.P., next brother to the fourth Earl of Clarendon, (q. v.) was b. 1692, and made a privy-councillor, Dec. 1852.

"To Mr. Charles Villiers the public owe thanks for speeches on Free-trade legislation to allow more of free trade to authors might be worthy of his attention."—Lon. Gent. Mag., Jan. 1860, 30; Literature in the Cabinet.

Villiers, George, second Duke of Buckingham, b. in London, 1627, educated at Christ Church, Oxford, d. of a fever in the house of one of his tenants at Kirkby Moorside, (not in "the worst inn's worst room," as Pope romances in his Moral Essays,) April 16, 1688, was the author of The Rehearsal, a Comedy, Lon., 1672, 4to, The Battle of Sedgemoor, a Farce, 1707, 8vo, 1714, (The Chances, 1682, 4to, is an alteration of Beaumont and Fletcher's Chances, and The Restoration, 1714, 8vo, is not his,) some poems, prose tracts, speeches, &c., q. v. in Park's Walpole's R. and N. Authors, iii. 304-15. The admirable comedy of The Rehearsal, (in which he is said to have had assistance,) and the portrait (Zimri) it provoked from a great limner, we have already noticed, (Dryden, John, p. 523, supra.) A collection called his Miscellaneous Works was published 1704, 8vo; his Works, so styled, ("a bookseller's miscellany, containing various poems and speeches of all times," Horace Walpole, ubi supra), 1715, 2 vols. 8vo; Works, 1721; Works, (said to contain his genuine works,) Edin., 1754, (Ruddiman.) But the best edition is the following: Works, containing his Plays and Miscellanies in Prose and Verse, with Explanatory Notes and Memoirs of the Author, (by T. Evans,) Lon., 1775, 2 vols. 12mo; on India paper, Steevens, 1227, 18s.

"His poems, which indeed are not very numerous, are capital in their kind; but what will immortalize his memory while our language shall be understood or true wit relished is his celebrated play of The Rehearsal; a comedy which is so perfect a master-piece in its way, and so truly an original," &c.—18440 Rehe. Biog. Dramat., i. Part 2, 1812, 780.

"He had so vitiated a taste, and so vulgar a style, that, except his Pindaric on Lord Fairfax, the following (To His Mistress) is perhaps the only effort of his muse which can be selected without conferring blame on the selector."—Park: Walpole's R. and N. Authors, iii. 314.

"A man so various, that he seem'd to be
Not one, but all mankind's epitome,
Stiff in opinions, always in the wrong,
He's every thing by starts, and nothing long;
But in the course of one revolving moon
Was chymist, fiddler, statesman, and buffoon."

Viner, Charles, d. at Aldershot, Hampshire, June 5, 1756, already noticed under BLACKSTONE. SIR WILLIAM, was, according to the gentleman first named, employed for more than half a century on A General Abridgment of Law and Equity, Alphabetically Digested under Proper Titles, with Notes and References to the Whole, Aldershot, 1742-51, 25 vols. fol.; to which (making 24 vols.) is added an Alphabetical Index to all the Abridgments of Law and Equity, &c., by Robert Kelham, Lon., 1758, fol. Viner had his work printed in his own house, from paper (marked with the numbers of the volumes, or the letters C V.) manufactured for the purpose. It is based upon Rolle, (see ROLLE, SIR HENRY, No. 1;) and, as D'Anvers's translation concludes with Extinguishment, (see p. 475, supra.) Viner began at Factor, and, after concluding the alphabet, proceeded to the title Abatement and worked up to his starting point, 2d ed., Lon., 1791 91, 21 vols. r. 8vo. To which add a Supplement by Several Gentlemen in the Respective Branches of the Law, (J. E. Watson, S. Comyn, J. Sedgwick, H. Aleock, J. Wyatt, J. Humphreys, A. Anstruther, and M. Nolan,) 1792-1806, 6 vols. r. 8vo. The vol. known as Viner on Evidence is vol. xii. of his Abridgment, which was sold separately.

"When a question of Evidence of any novelty or difficulty arises, fall not to search the 12th vol. of the last edition of Viner's Abridgment."—PROFESSOR W. WINTERKNECHT.

We quote some opinions on Viner's Abridgment:

"Brother Viner is not an authority. Cite the Cases that Viner quotes—that you may do."—Foster, J.

"Notwithstanding all its defects and inaccuracies, it must be allowed to be a necessary part of every lawyer's library."—ILLUSTRATIONS: 3 Co. Litt., p. a, note 3.

"He [the young practitioner] will find a great deal of important matter there which cannot be found elsewhere without great difficulty and inconvenience."—WARREN: Law Stu., 2d ed., 1845, 780.

Vinton, Francis, D.D., b. in Providence, R.I., 1809; graduated at West Point, (rank each year one of the five head ends,) 1830, at the Law School, Harvard University, 1833, and at the General Theological Seminary, N. York, 1839; was a Lieutenant U. S. Army, 1830-39; Civil Engineer on several railroads, 1830-34; ordained in the Prot. Episcopal Church, deacon, 1839, priest, 1840; elected Bishop of Indiana, and declined, 1847; Rector of Grace Church, Brooklyn Heights, 1847 to 1855, and Assistant Minister of Trinity Church, N. York, 1855 to the present date, (1870.) Professor of Ecclesiastical Polity and Law in the Episcopal General Theological Seminary, New York, March, 1869. He has published Arthur Tremaine, or Annals of Cadet Life, 1830, and single sermons, pamphlets, &c., 1810-64; contributed to Lectures on the Evidences of Christianity, Phila., 1855, 8vo, &c. (see, also, Fast-Day Sermons, N. York, 1861, 12mo.) and delivered public lectures on Dante, The Gentleman, &c. We notice especially his excellent Orator on The Annals of Rhode Island and Providence Plantations, N. York, 1863, 8vo.

"It abounds in historical facts, and is copiously illustrated with notes of great interest and value."—J. K. BARTLETT: Bibliog. of Rhode Island, 1861, 8vo, 206.

We apply the same language to Mr. Bartlett's book.

Vinton, Frederic, an industrious bibliographer, formerly connected with the Public Library of the City of Boston, deserves honourable notice as one of the compilers of the Indexes to the excellent Catalogues of that institution.—viz.: I. Index to the Catalogue of a Portion of the Public Library of the City of Boston, Arranged in the Lower Hall, 1858, r. 8vo, pp. iv., 204; II. Index to the Catalogue of Books in the Upper Hall of the Public Library of the City of Boston, 1861, r. 8vo, pp. vii., 902; III. Index to the Catalogue of Books in the Bates Hall of the Public Library of the City of Boston: First Supplement, 1866, r. 8vo, pp. iv., 718, 21.

Mr. Vinton is now pursuing his useful labours in the Library of Congress at Washington, D.C. (see SPENCER, A. R.) Let us hope that the treasures of that too-much-neglected collection will be rendered so easily accessible that it can no longer be said, "The American Congressmen reads nothing but the newspapers,"—and those only of his own party.

Wakefield, Gilbert, b. Feb. 22, 1756, in the parsonage house of St. Nicholas of Nottingham, and the third son of the Rev. George Wakefield, rector of that parish, was educated at, and in 1776 became Fellow of, Jesus College, Cambridge; in 1778 became Curate of Stockport, Cheshire, and Curate of St. Peter's, Liverpool, and in the next year took the post of classical tutor in the Dissenting Academy at Warrington, which he held until the dissolution of the establishment in 1783; from 1784 to 1790 resided at Nottingham, (deserting the Church of England in 1786,) where he taught school; from July, 1790, to June, 1791, was classical tutor in the Dissenting Academy at Haquey; from May 30, 1799, to May 29, 1801 was imprisoned in Dorchester jail for "a seditious libel" (A Reply to some Parts of the Bishop of Wakelind's Address to the People of Great Britain, Lon., 1798, 8vo, pp. 51,) during which his political friends presented him with £5000 as an evidence of their sympathy and esteem; d. in London, Sept. 9, 1801. After his desertion of the Church of England, of which he became a bitter assailant, he never joined any religious society; and in his Enquiry into the Expediency and Propriety of Social Worship (1791, 8vo: 3d ed., 1792) he advocated the negative with no little asperity: see Lon. Mon. Rev., 1792, i. 435. This tirade was answered by Dr. Disney, Mr. Wilson, Eusebia, and others.

Wakelind was a diligent and, we believe, a sincere inquirer after truth, but he was unhappily so trained in temper and habits of mind as to be nearly certain of missing it, in almost every topic of inquiry. . . . He was as violent against Greek accounts as he was against the Trinity, and atheismatized the final V as strongly as Episcopacy.—Brit. Crit., xxvi.

19. T. Lucretii Cari de Rerum Naturâ Libros Sex, &c.; et cum Animadversionibus Ricardii Bentleii, non ante vulgatis, aliorum subinde miscuit Gilbertus Wakefield, 1796-97, 3 vols. 4to, £5 5s.; l. p., 50 copies, imp. 4to, or sm: fol., £21. Many copies were destroyed by fire. Of the l. p., very beautiful, Heathcote's copy was sold for £50 8s., and for another Mr. Drummond paid Mr. Payne £70. The collations are said to be inaccurate, and the commentary has been characterized as more prolix than judicious. See the review in the Classical Journal, by Peter Blmsley; PORSON, RICHARD, No. 14. But it was highly praised by German critics. Editio altera ad Exemplar Gilberti Wakefield, cum ejusdem et R. Bentleii Notis, Glasgow, 1813, 4 vols. 8vo, £3 3s.; l. p., r. 8vo, £6 6s. Of the portion of vol. iv. containing the Varie Lectiones, 24 copies were struck off on 4to, to range with the original ed. of 1796-97.

"Beyond a doubt, the best critical edition of Lucretius extant. It is a faithful reprint of that of Gilbert Wakefield, [1796-97,] containing in addition the collation of the Editio Princeps, and the unedited notes of Bentley, which Wakefield had left untouched."—DINWID.

Dr. Busby, in his English translation of Lucretius, 1813, 2 vols. 4to, according to the (London) Quarterly Review, xi. 103, is largely indebted for "poetical illustration" to "the mine of Wakefield." The scholar must also procure Titi Lucretii Cari de Rerum Naturâ Libri Sex, with a Translation and Notes by H. A. J. Munro, M.A., Fellow of Trinity College, Cambridge, Camb., 1865, 2 vols. 8vo.

"A new edition of Lucretius, with a literal translation and a whole volume of notes, will supersede all its English predecessors, and prove that scholarship is not so dead among us as is sometimes asserted. . . . The book is that of a learned and industrious scholar, and his short introduction bears ample testimony to the zeal and patience with which he has collated manuscripts, compared and examined the works of past and present critics and commentators, and spared no pains to make his work as trustworthy and complete as possible."—Westm. Rev.

"Every part of his work affords ample proof that he has shunned no exertion to render himself thoroughly qualified for the successful performance of his useful task; and he has accomplished it in such a manner as to reflect honour upon English scholarship. He has produced a work which may take rank with the best German editions of ancient authors, and will long serve as a standard authority."—Lon. Athenæum, Jan. 1865.

20. In Euripidis Hecubam Londini nuper publicatam Diatribæ extemporariæ, 1797, 8vo. On Porson's Hecuba: see PORSON, RICHARD, No. 12, and the critique in Lon. Mon. Rev. (which also reviews this of Wakefield's) there indicated.

Porson treated the first named of these critics with little respect: for on being asked for a thrust with a sentiment from Shakespeare he gave "Gilbert Wakefield: 'What's Hecuba to him, or he to Hecuba?'" and, says Dr. Thomas Young, "there was quite as much of truth as there was of neatness in the application."

Charles James Fox, in the Years 1796-1801, chiefly on Subjects of Classical Literature, 1813, 8vo, pp. 232. Reviewed in Lon. Quar. Rev., ix. 313-23. (by J. W. Ward, afterwards Earl Dudley.) See, also, Ward's De Clifford; T. Moore's Memoirs, iv. 228.

We quote a few opinions on the general characteristics of Wakefield:

"A writer certainly of classical taste and of elegant attainments. . . . Whose professed attachment to truth and candour was too often biased by prejudice and disgraced by sarcasm."—DR. LATHRICE.

"Wakefield possessed an exquisite taste and a most inveterate fancy, as a critic; and this grieves that he should ever have misapplied his powers to politics and religion."—GREEN: Diary of a Lover of Lit., 63.

"He wanted time and patience for that discrimination which would have made his conjectures fewer, indeed, but more probable, and his principles more exact. [yet] I shall ever think of him as one of the best scholars produced by my own country in my own age."—DR. H.

See Wakefield's Memoirs, 2d ed., ii. 437-53. Heyne and his pupil Jacobus recommended him highly.

"Partly from imperfections in the manner in which he had been educated, partly from defects of mental character, he was not, and never could have become, either a profound or a refined scholar. Both his Latin style and his English are vicious and barbarous in the extreme."—Knight's Eng. Cyc., vi., 1858, 474, (p. v.)

"He had the pale complexion and mild features of a saint, was a most gentle creature in domestic life, and a very amiable man; but when he took part in political or religious controversy his pen was dipped in gall."—H. C. Robinson: Diary, &c., ed. Boet., 1870, i. 38. See Index.

Wakefield, Robert, according to Wood "the greatest linguist of his time," was b. in the North of England, and educated at Cambridge and on the Continent; taught Greek, Hebrew, Chaldaic, and Syriac in France and Germany; in 1519 left his Hebrew professorship at Louvain, returned to England, and became chaplain to Dr. Pace; opened a public lecture in Greek at Cambridge in 1524, made by Henry VIII., whom he favoured, after opposing, in the affair of his divorce from Katherine; Professor of Hebrew at Oxford, 1530; Canon of Wolsey's College, 1532; saved Hebrew and Greek MSS. at the dissolution of the lesser monasteries in 1536; d. in London, Oct. 8, 1537. 1. Oratio de Laudibus et Utilitate trium Linguarum Arabicæ, Chaldaicæ et Hebraicæ atque Idiomatibus Hebraicis quæ in utroque Testamento inveniuntur, Londini, apud Winandum de Worde, (1524), 4to. A lofty pillar on the walls of Londonderry still attracts the attention of the stranger:

"On the summit is the statue of Walker, such as when, in the last and most terrible emergency, his eloquence roused the fainting courage of his brethren. In one hand he grasps a Bible. The other, pointing down the river, seems to direct the eyes of his furnished audience to the English topmasts in the distant bay."—LORD MACAULAY: ubi supra, ch. xii.

Carroll Brewster, Phila., vol. i., 1869.

Wallace, Horace Binney, youngest son of John Bradford Wallace, and nephew of Horace Binney, was b. in Philadelphia, Feb. 26, 1817; studied for two years at the University of Pennsylvania, and graduated at Princeton, 1835; studied medicine, chemistry, and law, but never practised either; travelled in Europe, 1849-50, and 1862, and d. at Paris, Dec. 16, 1852. To Mr. Wallace's services to the literature of the law (written between his 27th and 32d years) we have already referred, (see HARE, J. I. CLARKE, and WALLACE, HORACE BINNEY;) these annotations are characterized by an eminent authority as "The fruits of an accomplished a legal mind as any man in any country at his early age has shown. . . . There is not a note or remark in the whole body that does not show the mind of a lawyer, imbued with the spirit of the science, instinctively perceiving and observing all its limitations, its harmonies, its modulations, its discords, as a cultivated ear perceives, without an effort, what is congruous or incongruous with the harmonies of sound."—HORACE BINNEY. see Cleveland's Comp. of Amer. Lit., 1859, 702.

Also highly commended by Bost. Law Journal, N. Amor. Rev., lxxxi. 220, &c. Mr. Wallace's early death prevented the preparation of a series of volumes on Civil Law, Commercial Law, and perhaps other subjects, which we have every reason to think would have been highly valued by the profession. At the age of twenty-one he published a novel entitled Stanley; or, The Recollections of a Man of the World, Phila., 1838, 12mo, which, ignorant of the authorship,—for it appeared anonymously,—we remember reading with great interest. He also contributed largely to periodicals, (see, also, GUSWOLD, RUFUS WILSON, D.D., No. 10;) and some of the articles thus given to the world will be found in two volumes published since his death, viz.:

1. Art and Scenery in Europe: with other Papers: being chiefly Fragments from the Portfolio of the late Horace Binney Wallace, Esquire, of Philadelphia, Phila., 1855, 12mo; enlarged and stereotyped, 1856, 12mo.

"The book was a surprise to all except the circle of his familiar friends. It exhibits so much taste and sensibility, such power of thought and flowing richness of style, that it has at once placed him among the eminent writers of the day."—N. Amor. Rev., lxxxi. 220, (by S. G. Fisher.)

"The style is elegant, fanciful, and easy, indicating an amateur's fondness for technicalities, but disguised by no affectation."—Lon. Athen., 1856, 789. See, also, Putnam's Mag., June and Sept. 1856.

2. Literary Criticisms, and other Papers, by the late Horace Binney Wallace, Esquire, of Philadelphia, 1856, 12mo; revised, 1856, 12mo.

"It is one of the few in this our day and generation who can appreciate the solution of a black-letter question."—Letter of Chief-Justice Gibson, of Pennsylvania, July 7, 1861.

"The development of great characters has always been one of my most favourite studies; and I doubt whether history displays, at thirty years of age, a loftier nature, or one more usefully or profoundly cultivated."—DANIEL WEBSTER: quoted in Knickerbocker Mag., July, 1856.

"In his heart, intellect, and character united in so rare combination and harmony, that he would have aided powerfully in advancing the difficult transition through which the nineteenth century has to pass. . . . I do not exaggerate his merits in ranking him as the equal of the greatest American statesmen."—AUGUSTE COMTE: ubi supra.

"Mr. Wallace's interesting and instructive work."—PROF. THEOPHILUS PARSONS.

"The fullest account which has yet been given of the Reports—their chronological order, their respective merits, the history, public and private, of the volumes, with biographical sketches of the authors—is presented in an American work. 'The Reports, Chronologically Arranged; with Occasional Remarks on their Respective Merits.' The author (Mr. Wallace) spent a considerable time at Lincoln's Inn, and at the Temple, London, from the libraries of which he collected much history hitherto not generally known. In the case of Farrell vs. Hilditch, 94 English Common Law, p. 885, the work received from the judges of the court of common pleas, sitting in banc at Westminster, the characterization of 'highly valuable and interesting,' and one to which 'they could not refrain from referring' on a question involving the reputation of one of the early English reporters."—2 Bowler's Law Dict., 443, 12th ed., 1868, art. Waller, Edmund, the son of Robert Waller, and a connection by marriage (through his uncle, William Hampden, father of the famous John Hampden) of Oliver Cromwell, b. at Coleshill, Hertfordshire, March 3, 1605; inherited whilst yet in his boyhood an estate of £3500 a year; received his education at Eton and King's College, Cambridge; commenced his legislative career (so it is alleged) as a member for Amersham of the third Parliament of James I., which met in January, 1621, and concluded a long service as a representative of Saltash in the first and only Parliament of James II., which convened on his accession in May, 1685; was married to his first wife, Anna Banks, "a great heiress in the city," July 15, 1631, and after her early death wooed unsuccessfully, in poetical numbers, (as Sacharissa), Lady Dorothy Sidney, (who married in 1639 Henry Lord Spencer, subsequently Earl of Sunderland, and in 1652 Robert Smythe, Esq.) eldest daughter of the Earl of Leicester; again invoked his muse, and, with like ill success, chanted the praises (as Amoret) of Lady Sophia Murray; consoled himself for his double—at least—disappointment by the hand and heart of Miss Mary Bresse or Breaux, who in one sense, certainly, satisfied his ambition and brought him "family," for she presented him, at due intervals, with five sons and eight daughters; in 1643 was detected in a plot for the re-establishment of the authority of Charles I., was imprisoned for a year and fined £10,000, and only saved his life by abject submission, betrayal of his friends, and exile from his home; about 1653 was permitted to return to England, and became a great favourite with Cromwell, who often visited the poet's mother (always a professed royalist) at her house at Beaconfield; in 1654 celebrated the praises of Cromwell in A Panegyric to my Lord Protector, and in 1660 welcomed his royal successor by verses To the King upon his Majesty's Happy Return; died at Beaconfield, October 21 1687. See Dublin's Lib. Comp., 733. To these should be added, The Passion of Dido for Æneas, as it is incomparably express in the Fourth Book of Virgil, translated by Edmund Waller and Sidney Godolphin, Esqrs., 1658, sm. 8vo. Some of his speeches were published separately from his poems. "He was joined with Lord Buckhurst in the translation of Cornellius's Pompey, and is said to have added his help to that of Cowley in the original draught of the Rehearsal." His poems are chiefly brief and occasional, though among them is a description of Divine Love, in six cantos.

"The characters by which Waller intended to distinguish his writing are sprightliness and dignity: in his smaller pieces he endeavours to be gay; in the larger, to be great. Of his airy and light productions the chief source is gallantry, that attentive reverence of female excellence which has descended to us from the Gothic ages. As his poems are commonly occasional, and his addresses personal, he was not so liberally supplied with grand as with soft images; for beauty is more easily found than magnanimity. The delicacy which he cultivated restrains him to a certain nicety and caution, even when he writes upon the slightest matter. He has, therefore, in his whole volume nothing burlesque, and seldom anything ludicrous or familiar. He seems always to do his best; though his subjects are often unworthy of his care. . . . But of the praise of Waller, though much may be taken away, much will remain; for it cannot be denied that headed something to our elegance of diction, and something to our propriety of thought; and to him may be applied what Tasso said, with equal spirit and justice, of himself and Guarini, when, having perused the 'Pastor Fido,' he cried out, if he had not read 'Aminta' he had not excelled it!"—Dr. Johnson: Life of Waller, in his Lives of Eng. Poets, P. Cunningham's ed., 1854, i. 250, 260.

Read the whole of this Life and Mr. Cunningham's Illustrative Notes.

"Waller was the first refiner of English poetry, at least of English rhyme; but his performances still abound with many faults; and, what is more material, they contain but few and superficial beauties. Gaiety, wit, and ingenuity are their ruling character. They aspire not to the sublime, still less to the pathetic. They treat of love without making us feel any tenderness, and abound in panegyric without exciting admiration. The panegyric, however, on Cromwell contains more force than we should expect from the other compositions of this poet."—Hume's Hist. of England, ch. lxii. The Commonwealth. See, also, ch. lvi.

With like carelessness Bishop Atterbury, who meditated an edition of Waller's Poems, tells us (Preface to Waller's Poems, 1690) that Waller was "the parent of English verse, and the first that showed us that our tongue had beauty and numbers." Surely it was not reserved for the poets of "Charles's days" to make this pleasing discovery. Dryden, Prior, and Pope are among the eminent critics who commend the sweetness of Waller's verse; and in other respects, also, he has been advantageously compared with some of his contemporaries:

"Waller has a more uniform elegance, a more sure facility and happiness of expression, and, above all, a greater exemption from glaring faults, such as pedantry, extravagance, conceit, quaintness, obscurity, ungrammatical and unmeaning constructions, than any of the Caroline era with whom he would naturally be compared. We have only to open Curew or Lovelace to perceive the difference; not that Waller is wholly without some of these faults, but that they are much less frequent. If others may have brighter passages of fancy or sentiment, which is not difficult, he husbands better his resources, and, though left behind in the beginning of the race, comes sooner to the goal. . . . In his numerous poetry he has little passion or sensibility; but he is never free and petulant, never tedious, and never absurd. His praise consists much in negations; but, in a comparative estimate, perhaps negations ought to count for a good deal."—Italam: Lit. Hist. of Europe, 4th ed., 1854, iii. 472. See, also, 42, 484.

"Waller, whom you proscribe, sir, owed his reputation to the graces of his manner, though he frequently stumbled, and even fell flat; but a few of his smaller pieces are as graceful as possible: one might say that he excelled in paintings, in contrast, but could not succeed in portraits in oil, large as life."—Horace Walpole to J. Pinkerton, (on his Heron's Letters: Letters, ed. 1801, viii. 564.

His latest critic concludes his survey with these remarks:

"There are not, perhaps, two hundred really good lines in all Waller's poetry. Extravagant conceits, feeble verses, and defective rhymes are constantly recurring; although the poems, being mostly short, are not tedious. Of elevated imagination, profound thought, or passion, he was utterly destitute; and it is only in detached passages, single stanzas, or small pieces, finished with great care and elegance, as the lines on a lady's girdle, those on the dwarfs, and a few of the lyrics, that we can discern that play of fancy, varied sweetness, and harmony which gave so great a name to Waller for more than a hundred years."—ROBERT CANNAN: Life of Waller, in Envy, Brit., 8th ed., xxi., 1860, 601.

"Waller was smooth, but Dryden taught to join
The varying pause, the full resounding line,
The long majestic march, and energy divine."—Pope.

"The book, next to the elements, which was put into his [Isaac Newton's] hands was Wallis's Arithmetic of Infinities, a work well fitted for suggesting new views in geometry and calling into activity the powers of mathematical invention. Wallis had effected the quadrature of all those curves in which the value of one of the co-ordinates can be expressed in terms of the other without involving either fractional or negative exponents. Beyond this point neither his researches nor those of any other geometer had yet reached, and from this point the discoveries of Newton began."—PROF. JOHN PLAYFAIR: Encyc. Brit., Dissert. Walpole, Rt. Hon. Horace, (Horatio,) Earl of Orford, considered by most of his contemporaries and biographers to have been the third and youngest son of Sir Robert Walpole (infra) by Catherine Shorter, his first wife, was born October 6, 1717, and educated at Eton and at King's College, Cambridge; travelled for two years on the continent. (see GRAY, THOMAS,) and on his return home, September, 1741, took his seat as M.P. for Callington; exchanged for Castle Rising, 1744, and from 1754 to 1768, when he retired from Parliament, represented King's Lynn. By the favour of his reputed father, he enjoyed for many years before his death three sinecure offices, Usher of the Exchequer, Comptroller of the Pipe, and Clerk of the Estreates,—the profits of which (several thousands of pounds per annum) enabled him to enlarge his Strawberry Hill residence (purchased in 1747) from a cottage to a Gothic villa, and to fill it with works of art,—many of them of great value and rarity. In 1791, by the death of his nephew George, third Earl of Orford, he succeeded to the title and estates of his family; but, with his usual affectation, he appeared rather to despise than to value his new honours,—never took his seat in the House of Lords, and, to avoid the use of his title, sometimes signed himself, The Uncle of the late Earl of Orford. He died at his house in Berkeley Square, London, March 2, 1797, in his 80th year. He was never married.

I have remarked that Horace Walpole was considered by most of his contemporaries and biographers to have been the son of Sir Robert Walpole. The inference from this statement will naturally be that there were some who thought otherwise. My explanation shall be conveyed in the words of Walpole's latest editor:

"It is said that, latterly, Sir Robert Walpole and his wife did not live happily together, and that Horace, the youngest, was not the son of the great Prime Minister of England, but of Carr Lord Hervey, elder brother of Pope's antagonist, and reckoned, as Walpole records, of superior parts to his celebrated brother, John. The story rests on the authority of Lady Louisa Stuart, daughter of the minister Earl of Bute, and grand-daughter of Lady Mary Wortley Montagu. She has related it in print in the Introductory Anecdotes to Lady Mary's Works; and there is too much reason to believe that what she says is true."—PETER CUNNINGHAM: Pref. to his ed. of Walpole's Letters, 13 Sept. 1858, q. v. for Mr. Cunningham's reflections on this delicate theme.

Was it so then, indeed, that this eager retailer of scandal appertaining to so many great families was himself, all unconsciously, ("for we have no evidence whatever that a suspicion of spurious parentage ever crossed the mind of Horace Walpole."—Cunningham, ubi supra.) so vulnerable in the very tenderest point? It may be so; but I am bound to say that Mr. Cunningham's reasons for crediting Lady Stuart's story appear to me altogether inconclusive.

The portrait of Horace has often been sketched, and perhaps never so vividly as by a great artist lately withdrawn from us in the prime of his wonderful powers:

"He was, unless we have formed a very erroneous judgment of his character, the most eccentric, the most artificial, the most fastidious, the most capricious, of men. His mind was a bundle of inconsistent whims and affectations. His features were covered by mask within mask. When the outer disguise of obvious affectation was removed, you were still as far as ever from seeing the real man. He played innumerable parts, and over-acted them all. When he talked misanthropy, he out-timed Timon. When he talked philanthropy, he left Howard at an immeasurable distance. He scoffed at Courts, and kept a chronicle of their most trifling scandal,—at Society, and was blown about by its slightest veerings of opinion,—at Literary Fame, and left fair copies of his private letters, with copious notes, to be published after his decease,—at Rank, and never for a moment forgot that he was an Honourable,—at the practice of Entail, and talked the ingenuity of conveyancers to tie up his villa in the strictest settlement.

"The conformation of his mind was such that whatever was little seemed to him great, and whatever was great seemed to him little. Serious business was a trifle to him, and trifles were his serious business. To chat with blue-stockings,—to write little copies of complimentary verses on little occasions,—to superintend a private press,—to preserve from natural decay the perishable topics of Ranelagh and White's,—to record divorces and beds, Miss Chudleigh's absurdities and George Selwyn's good sayings,—to decorate a grotesque house with pie-crust battlements,—to procure rare engravings and antique chimney-boards,—to match odd gaimtlets,—to lay out a maze of walks within five acres of grounds,—these were the grave-employments of his long life. From these he turned to politics as to an amusement. After the labours of the print-shop and the auction-room, he unbent his mind in the House of Commons. And, having indulged in the recreation of making laws and voting millions, he returned to more important pursuits,—to researches after Queen Mary's comb, Wolsey's red hat, the pipe which Van Tromp smoked during his last sea-fight, and the spur which King William struck into the flank of Sorrel."—LORD MACAULAY: Edin. Rev., Oct. 1833, (lviii.) 227, 228; repub. in his Essays.

Against this verdict Miss Mary Berry (see her Advertisement in Walpole's Letters, 1840, 6 vols. 8vo) earnestly protests: yet Macaulay's sketch agrees very well with Walpole's portrait by his own hand:

"I am certainly the greatest philosopher in the world, without ever having thought of being so; always employed, and never busy; eager about trifles, and indifferent to every thing serious. Well, if it is not philosophy, at least it is content."—Letter to Hon. H. S. Conway, Aug. 18, 1774, Cunningham's ed., 1861, vi. 100. See, also, extracts from his Letters, infra.

"Horace Walpole was an agreeable, lively man, very affected, always aiming at wit, in which he fell very short of his old friend George Selwyn, who possessed it in the most genuine but indescribable degree."—LORD OSBORN: Walpole's Letters, Cunningham's ed., 1861, v. 256, n.

Walpole was the last surviving disciple of the school of St. Erasmus, Chaulieu, &c.—a tribe of philosophers who united study with amusement and sentiment with vivacity; but in him the levity of the French Epicureans was invigorated by the masculine strength of the British character."—WALSHAM.

"His figure," remarks Miss Huskings, in the reminiscence of her early residence at Twickenham, "was not merely tall, but, more properly, long and slender to excess; his complexion, and particularly his hands, of a most unhealthily paleness. His eyes were remarkably bright and penetrating, very dark and lively; his voice was not strong, but his tones were extremely pleasant, and, if I may so say, highly gentlemanly. I do not remember his common gait. He always entered a room in that style of affected delicacy which fashion had then made almost natural: chapeau bras between his hands, as if he wished to compress it, or under his arm; knees bent, and feet on tiptoe, as if afraid of a wet floor. His dress in visiting was most usually, in summer, when I most saw him, a lavender suit, the waistcoat embroidered with a little silver, or of white silk worked in the tambour, partridge silk stockings and gold buckles, ruffles and frill generally lace. I remember, when a child, thinking him very much under-dressed if at any time, except in mourning, he wore hemmed cambric. In summer no powder, but his wig combed straight and showing his very smooth, pale forehead, and quined behind; in winter, powder."

"In the evening," says Madame D'Arblay, "came in Mr. Walpole; gay, though caustic; polite, though sneering; and entertainingly epigrammatical. I like and admire, but could not love nor trust him."

Let us quote something better, from one who knew him better:

"The affections of his heart were bestowed on few, for in early life they had never been cultivated; but they were singularly warm, pure, and constant; characterised not by the ardour of passion, but by the constant pre-occupation of real affection. . . . To the friends of his own election his devotion was not confined to professions or words: on all occasions of difficulty, of whatever nature, his active affection came forward in defence of their character or assistance in their affairs."—MISS BEAUF: Advertisement, &c., ubi supra. "The first edition of the 'Anecdotes' was of three hundred, of the first two volumes; and of as many of the third volume, and of the volume of 'Engravers.' Then there was an edition of three hundred of all four. . . . Of my new fourth volume I printed [about Oct. 1, 1780] six hundred; but, as they can be had, I believe not a third part is sold. This is a very plain lesson to me, that my editions sell for their curiosity, and not for any merit in them; and so they would if I printed Mother Goose's Tales, and but a few. As my 'Anecdotes of Painting' have been published at such distant periods, and in three divisions, complete sets will be seldom seen: so, if I am humbled as an author I may be vain as a printer; and when one has nothing else to be vain of, it is certainly very little worth while to be proud of that."—To Rev. W. Coles, Nov. 30, 1780: Letters, ed. 1861, vii. 467.

"In a work that comprehends so much biography as my 'Anecdotes of Painting,' it would have been impossible, even with much more diligence than I employed, not to make numberless mistakes. It is kind to point out to me those errors; and to the world it is justice."—To John Nichols, in the Criticism on Nichols's Biograph on Walpole's Anecdotes, Oct. 31, 1781: Letters, ut supra, viii. 99. See, also, 100, 123.

"I do not doubt that there is a swarm of diminutive inaccuracies in my 'Anecdotes';—well, if there is, I beseech from leave of correction to the microscope intellects of my continuators. I look dates and facts from the sedulous and faithful Vertue, and plucked myself on little but on giving an idea of the spirit of the times with regard to the arts at the different periods."—To Rev. W. Coles, Feb. 15, 1782: Letters, ut supra, viii. 108. See, also, 223, 226, n., 228, 314.

"I detained my own volume of 'Painters' for nine years, though there is certainly no abuse in it, lest it should not satisfy the children of some of those artists."—To Dr. J. Warton, Dec. 9, 1784: Letters, ut supra, viii. 533.

"When the 'Anecdotes of Painting' became so ridiculously dear, which happened by collectors of portraits cutting out the prints, and using the text, I suppose, for waste paper, I printed a small edition without prints, at half a crown a volume. . . . These 'Anecdotes' are the only thing I ever published of any use."—To the Countess of Ossory, Sept. 15, 1789: Letters, ut supra, ix. 110.

"The first romance in our language."—LORD BYRON.

"The actors in the romance are strikingly drawn, with bold outlines becoming the age and nature of the story. Feudal tyranny was perhaps never better exemplified than in the character of Manfred. . . . The applause due to chastity and precision of style, to a happy combination of supernatural agency with human interest, to a tone of feudal manners and language sustained by characters strongly drawn and well discriminated, and to unity of action, producing scenes alternately of interest and of grandeur,—the applause, in fine, which cannot be denied to him who can excite the passions of fear and of pity,—must be awarded to the author of The Castle of Otranto."—*SIR WALTER SCOTT: Biog. "What I will venture to call a master-piece. . . . Where a beautiful imagination, supported by strength of judgment, has enabled the author to go beyond his subject, and effect the full purpose of ancient tragedy."—HISNOPE WARDROUN: Note to Pope's Imit. of Horace, Book 2, Ep. I., v. 146.

"Read the Castle of Otranto, which grievously disappointed my expectations."—Green's Theory of a Lover of Lit., 1810, 4to, 22.

"The Castle of Otranto (which is supposed to have led the way to this style of writing) is, to my notion, dry, meagre, and without effect. It is done upon false principles of taste. The great hand and arm which are thrust into the court-yard, and remain there all day long, are the pasteboard machinery of a pantomime; they shock the senses, and have no purchase upon the imagination. They are a matter-of-fact impossibility; a fixture, and no longer a phantom. Quod sic multi ostendit incredulitas odi."—HAZLITT: Lects. on the Comic Writers, Lect. VI.: On the English Novelists. See, also, Dunlop's Hist. of Fiction; Masson's Brit. Novelists, Lect. II.; Encyc. Brit., 8th ed., xix. 276; Romance.

"It is certain that I am sincerely modest about it, for I not only never thought of its appearing on the stage, but have not published it. It has indeed received greater honours than any of its superiors; for Lady Di Beauclerk has drawn seven scenes of it, that would be fully worthy of the best of Shakespeare's plays,—such drawings that Salvator Rosa and Gubbio could not surpass their expression and beauty. I have built a Closet on purpose for them here at Strawberry Hill. It is called the Beauclerk Closet; and whoever sees the drawings allows that no description comes up to their merit; and, then, they do not shock and disgust, like their original."—To Sir H. Mann, Oct. 31, 1779: Letters, ed. 1861, vi. 265.

(vol. vi.)

"The 'Historic Doubts' are an acute and curious example how minute antiquarian research may shake our faith in the facts most pointedly avowed by general history. It is remarkable also to observe how, in defending a system which was probably at first adopted as a mere literary exercise, Mr. Walpole's doubts acquired, in his own eyes, the respectability of certainties, in which he could not brook controversy."—SIR WALTER SCOTT: Biog. Notices, &c.: Horace Walpole.

15. Hasty Productions, by Lord Orford, Norwich, 1791, 8vo: 25 copies, some of which were burnt by his executor, Mrs. Damer, the productions being "clever but very free." He also published a number of political tracts, &c. (see Bohn's Lowndes, 2820, 2822,) wrote Nos. vi., viii., x., xiv., xviii., ciii., cix., and xciv. of The World, and the concluding World Extraordinary, containing the character of Henry Fox, afterwards Lord Holland, and was the author of some poetical pieces in Dodsley's Collection.

Walpole projected a complete edition of all his works from the Strawberry Hill press, and about 1770 at seq. prepared there two volumes which are included in—16. The Works of Horatio Walpole, Earl of Orford, illustrated with upwards of 150 Portraits, edited by Robert Berry, &c., (see BERRY, MARY,) Lon., 1798, 5 vols. 4to, £10 10s.; l. p., r. 4to, £21. But all former collections of Walpole's Letters were superseded by—

X. The Letters of Horace Walpole, Earl of Orford; Edited by Peter Cunningham; Now first Chronologically Arranged, (with nearly 50 portraits after Reynolds, Romney, Gainsborough, &c., engraved on steel,) Bentley, 1857-58, 9 vols. 8vo, 10s. 6d. ea.; Bohn, (Eng. Gent. Lib., i.-ix.) 1861, 9 vols. demy 8vo, 9s. ea.

"In addition to the series of 'Letters by Walpole' already in print, (and forming nearly 20 volumes in 4to and 8vo, as originally published,) this new edition includes numerous [117] important letters, now for the first time communicated to the Editor from the original MSS. in possession of various families of distinction, (and 56 letters now first collected.) By the advantage of a chronological arrangement of the entire correspondence, it forms a complete domestic history of English society, fashion, art, and literature, chronicled by a writer of unsurpassed wit and unflagging brilliancy during three-quarters of the last century. The voluminous Notes of Agost, Ellis, Mitford, and others, combined with those of the present Editor throw all possible light on the transactions of the bygone days which live again in the pages of their accomplished historian and annalist."—Advertisement, 1858.

"His epistolary talents have shown our language to be capable of all the graces and of all the charms of the French of Madame de Sévigné."—MISS BERRY.

"Of letter-writers by profession we have, indeed, few; although Horace Walpole, bright, fresh, quaint, and glittering as one of his most precious lyrics of Dresden china, is a host in himself."—MISS MITFORD. Reveries of a Lit. Life, ch. xxxv.

"Read, if you have not read, all Horace Walpole's letters, wherever you can find them: the best yet ever published in the shape of letters."—REV. SYDNEY SMITH: Letter (No. 186) to Edin. Davenport, Edin., Nov. 19, 1820; Mem. of Rev. S. Smith, ii.

"Walpole's Letters are generally considered as his best performances, and we think, with reason. His faults are far less offensive to us in his correspondence than in his books. His wild, absurd, and ever-changing opinions about men and things are easily pardoned in familiar letters. His bitter, scoffing, depreciating disposition does not show itself in so unmitigated a manner as in his 'Memoirs.' A writer of letters must be civil and friendly to his correspondent, at least, if to no other person."—LORD MACARTNEY: Edin. Rev., lviii. (Oct. 1833) 240.

"But it is not, we say, for the mere merits of his style that Walpole's Letters are, we think, destined, more surely perhaps than any other work of his or our age, to immortality; it is because these Letters are in fact a chronicle—much more minute and particular than Holinshed or Hall—of every occurrence and of every opinion which attracted or deserved public attention, either at home or abroad, during one of the busiest half-centuries of European history. . . . Walpole's great History of his Own Times."—REV. HON. J. W. CROKER: Lon. Quar. Rev., lxxix. (Sept. 1843) 517, and lxxxix. (Sept. 1848) 118.

"I refrain to quote from Walpole regarding George, for those charming volumes are in the hands of all who love the gossip of the last century. Nothing can be more cheery than Horace's Letters. Fiddling all through them: wax-lights, fine dresses, fine jokes, fine plates, fine equipages, glitter and sparkle there; never was such a brilliant, jiggling, smirking Vanity Fair as that through which he leads us. Horsey, the next great authority, is a darker spirit."—THACKERAY: George the Second.

"Compare Walpole's Letters in Mr. Cunningham's excellent new edition."—THACKERAY: The Virginians, vol. ii. ch. xxx., n.

I read through the whole of these Letters,—from the front cover of vol. i. to the back cover of vol. ix., not omitting even the Rev. Mr. Mason's, which are about as affected and stupid as any that I remember. My time I cannot recall; but I may, by this hint, save somebody else's. Skip Mason's.

18. WALPOLE'S MEMOIRS AND JOURNAL.

I. Memoirs of the Last Ten Years [1751-1760] of the Reign of King George II.; from the Original MSS., (edited by Lord Holland,) 1822, (some 1828,) 2 vols. r. 4to, £5 5s.; same, save some misprints, and Edited, with a Preface and Notes, by the late Lord Holland, on title-page 1846, (some 1847,) 3 vols. 8vo. Reviewed in Edin. Rev., xxxvii. 1, (by Rev. Sydney Smith;) Lon. Quar. Rev., xxvii. 178, (by J. W. Croker;) Lon. Mon. Rev., xxviii. 1; Lon. Gent. Mag., 1822, i. 235; *Lon. "Have you read Lord Orford's Memoirs of his own time? It is read and lively, but serves, I think, to show how little those who live in public business, and of course in constant agitation and intrigue, know about the real and deep progress of opinions and events."—SIR WALTER SCOTT: Lockhart's Scott, ch. iv.

II. Memoirs of the Reign of King George III., [from his accession to 1771:] Now first Published from the Original MSS.; Edited, with Notes, by Sir Denis Le Marchant, Bart., 1845, (some 1847,) 4 vols. 8vo; Phila., 1845, 2 vols. 8vo: 2d ed., Lon., 1851, 4 vols. 8vo. "Walpole's Correspondence and Memoirs, in many respects, are highly valuable, and will always be referred to, as throwing much important light on the parliamentary and court transactions of the middle of the eighteenth century."—SIR ARCHIBALD ALISON: Essays, 1850, i. 325.

III. Journal of the Reign of King George the Third, from the Year 1771 to 1783: being a Supplement to his Memoirs: now first Published from the Original MSS.; Edited, with Notes, by Dr. Doran, Lon., 1859, 2 vols. demy 8vo.

"These volumes abound in literary and social gossip."—Notes and Queries.

"They are prejudiced, incomplete, angry,—not always borne out by after-facts; but they have a genuine stamp on them, and Horace Walpole's seal was, in regard to the device and sharpness of impression, no common one."—Lon. Athen., 1859, i. 148. See, also, 9.

Dr. Doran does not find Walpole's MS. Commonplace-Book, evidently intended for the press, of a proper character for publication.

To Walpole's Letters and Correspondence, and his Memoirs and Journal may be added—Memoirs of Horace Walpole and his Contemporaries, including Numerous Original Letters, chiefly from Strawberry Hill; Edited by Eliot Warburton, 1831, 2 vols. 8vo: red. to 4s., 1853. Condemned by Lon. Gent. Mag., 1851, ii. 45; Lon. Athen., 1851, 428; Lon. Lit. Gaz., 1851, 251, 403.

"In his multitudinous collection nothing was incongruous, nothing out of place; every thing was well arranged, every thing was complete in its way. Some things might be fancied, some trifling; yet all gave evidence of good taste, of refined intellect, and of a range of thought, of occupation, of amusement, far far higher than could be challenged by any other votary of fashion of that time. Horace Walpole was himself a living specimen of the rarity which he prized. Strawberry Hill and its master were alike unique."—Mrs. Stone: Chronicles of Fashion,—English Society.

Walpole's professed estimate of his own pursuits, and of his productions, was sufficiently humble:

"Every thing," he writes to Cole, in 1781, "tells me how silly I am! I pretend to reason, and yet am a virtuoso!"

"In my latter age," he confesses to Pinkerton, "I discovered the futility both of my objects and writings: I felt how insignificant is the reputation of an author of mediocrity, and that, being no genius, I only added one more name to a list of writers that had told the world nothing but what it could not as well be without."

And again, when quoting Pope's description of the wits of Charles's days, "The mob of gentlemen who write with ease," he adds, "Into that class I must sink: and I had rather do so imperceptibly, than to be plunged down to it by the interposition of the hand of a friend who could not gainsay that sentence."

And when declining a eulogistic dedication of Beloe's Aulus Gellius, (Dec. 2, 1797,) he thus addresses the translator:

"Next to being ashamed of having good qualities bestowed on me to which I should have no title, it would hurt me to be praised on my erudition, which is most superficial, and on my trifling writings, all of which turn on most trifling subjects. They amused me while writing them, may have amused a few persons, but have nothing solid enough to preserve them from being forgotten with other things of as light a nature."—Walpole's Letters, Cunningham's ed., 1861, ix. 448.

"It is most true, sir, that so far from being prejudiced in favour of my own writings, I am persuaded that, had I thought early as I think now, I should never have appeared as an author. . . . I know how trifling my own writings are, and how far below the standard that constitutes excellence: as for the shades that distinguish the degrees of mediocrity, they are not worth discrimination."—To J. Pinkerton, Oct. 27, 1784: Letters, ed. 1861, viii. 615. See, also, 208, 209, 210, 260, 288.

"I have been so foolish as to be an author, (of which I most heartily repent.) It is not only exposing oneself, but giving others an opportunity to expose one; and therefore, being already one of that general set of fools, it matters little if I am ragged in any particular class. . . . A name so insignificant as mine, and which will every day grow more obscure, or be remembered only by my follies."—To the Earl of Harcourt, Sept. 1, 1787: Letters, ut supra, ix. 105.

"I have several reasons for lamenting daily that I ever was either author or editor. . . . I have been long vexed at the ridiculous prices given for my editions. It could not be flattering to the vainest author or editor upon earth; for their dearness is solely to be attributed to their severity; and a collector who pays extravagantly for a rare book will never read in it, or allow anybody else; for the virgin purity of the margin is as sacred with him as the text."—To the Countess of Ossory, Sept. 15, 1787: Letters, ut supra, ix. 110. See, also, 133, 164, 449.

I was to give some extracts exhibiting his own estimate of his character:

"Unalterable in my principles, careless about most things below essentials, indulging myself in trifles by system, annihilating myself by choice, but dealing fully at an unseasonable age, I contrive to pass my time agreeably enough, yet are its termination approach without anxiety. This is a true picture of my mind."—To Hon. H. & Conway, June 20, 1776: Letters, ut supra, vi. 553.

"I would fling up my patent to-morrow if it was capable of making me do one servile act, if it deterred me one moment from following the dictates of conscience and friendship. Both in Parliament and out of it, I will say and do what I think right and honest. I was born free, and I will live and die so, in spite of patents and pieces. I may be ruined, as Mr. Conway has been, but I will preserve my honour inviolate. If I did not, I might receive you here with more magnificence, but I had rather receive you, as I hope to do, without a blush. You know the passion I have for Strawberry Hill; but, trust me, at this moment I know I could with pleasure see it sold, if reduced to it by suffering for my country and my principles."—Letters, ut supra, iv. 244.

"It was always Walpole's foible to disclaim a professed pursuit of public favour, for which, however, he earnestly laboured. . . . There was much affectation in this, which accordingly met the reward which affection usually incurs; as Walpole seems to have suffered a good deal from the criticism which he affected to despise, and occasionally from the neglect which he appeared to court."—Sir Walter Scott: Life of Walpole.

"That feeble writer (Horace Walpole) has too long 'incumbered our libraries with his masses of cobwebs, his ponderous volumes of slimy effusions.'"—Dr. Thomas Brown: Edm. Rev. n. (April, 1803) 238.

"It is the fashion to underrate Horace Walpole: firstly, because he was a nobleman, and secondly, because he was a gentleman; but, to say nothing of the composition of his incomparable letters, and of the Castle of Otranto, he is the 'Ultimus Romanorum,'—the author of the Mysterious Mother, a tragedy of the highest order, and not a pulling low-play. He is the father of the first romance and of the last tragedy in our language; and surely worthy of a higher place than any living writer, be he who he may."—Lord Byron: Preface to Marino Faliero, 1820.

"What, then, is the charm, the irresistible charm, of Walpole's writings? It consists, we think, in the art of amusing without exciting. He never convinces the reason, nor fills the imagination, nor touches the heart; but he keeps the mind of the reader constantly attentive and constantly entertained. . . . No one who has written so much is so seldom tiresome. In his books there is scarcely any of those passages which in our school-days we used to call silly. Yet he often wrote on subjects which are generally considered as dull,—on subjects which men of great talents have in vain endeavored to render popular. . . . He rejects all but the attractive parts of his subject. He keeps only what is in itself amusing, or what can be made so by the artifice of his diction. The coarsest morsels of antiquarian learning he abandons to others, and sets out an entertainment worthy of a Roman epicure,—an entertainment consisting of nothing but delicacies,—the brains of singing birds, the roe of mullets, the sunny halves of peaches. . . . We own that we expect to see fresh Humes and fresh Burkes before we again fall in with that peculiar combination of moral and intellectual qualities to which the writings of Walpole owe their extraordinary popularity."—Lord Macaulay: Edm. Rev. lviii. (Oct. 1833) 235, 238, 239.

I am now (1870) able to make a valuable addition to my Walpoliana, viz.: Extracts from the Journals and Correspondence of Miss Berry, from the Year 1783 to 1852: Edited by Lady Theresa Lewis, Longmans, 1865, 3 vols. 8vo; 2d ed., 1866, 3 vols. 8vo. Reviewed in Edm. Rev., Oct. 1865, Lon. Quar. Rev., No. cxxxvii., Jan. 1866, Brit. Quar. Rev., Jan. 1866, Lon. Reader, 1865, ii. 391, 421, 452. To my article BERRY, MARY, I add that she wrote in 1801 a comedy in five acts, called Fashionable Friends, which was produced at Strawberry Hill in 1801, (Prologue and Epilogue by Joanna Baillic), and subsequently on a public stage. She survived Walpole nearly fifty-six years, dying Nov. 21, 1852, in her 90th year, (b. March, 1763.) Agnes Berry died Jan. 1852, in her 88th year, (b. May, 1761.) Few women moved so long and so acceptably in fashionable society, and knew so many distinguished persons, as Mary and Agnes Berry. For Walpole's first notice of them, see his letter to the Countess of Ossory, Oct. 11, 1788, (Letters, ed. 1861, ix. 152, 163, et seq.) For an obituary notice of Miss Berry, see Gentleman's Magazine, 1853, i. 96.

Did Horace Walpole wish to marry Mary Berry? It is taken for granted that he did. Lady Lewis remarks,

"It has often been a matter of speculation whether Lord Orford's great attachment to Miss Berry had ever led to any explicit declaration of a wish to obtain her consent to their union in marriage. Notwithstanding the frequent professions of equal attachment to both sisters, it is easy to see throughout the correspondence that Miss Berry herself was his first object. The dread of being thought ridiculous by playing the part of a more than septuagenarian lover no doubt acted as a constant check upon the indulgence of such hopes as he might have reasonably entertained as a younger man; and so entirely dependent was he on the society of Miss Berry and her sister for what remained to him of pleasure in life, that, even if impelled by the wish to secure to himself the absolute right to her companionship and attentions as a wife, he probably feared to lose her friendship by proffering the hand she might not accept; yet it was admitted by those best entitled to know, that at one time Miss Berry was conscious that the choice was within her power; but she clung to his friendship too warmly and too sincerely not to sedulously guard him from the expression of any feeling she could not fully return. She accepted his friendly affection without reserve. He was spared the mortification of ever learning from her lips that more he could never expect."—Extracts, &c., ut supra, ii. 20.

Now, I am satisfied that Walpole had no intention that his hand should follow his heart. He writes to them, October 10, 1790, "As wives and darling children I have loved and do love you; and, charming as you both are, I have no occasion to remind you that I am past seventy-three." He writes to the Countess of Ossory, May 29, 1792, "In short, they are extraordinary beings, and I am proud of my partiality for them; and since the ridicule can only fall on me, and not on them, I care not a know for to being said that I am in love with one of these people shall choose which: it is as much with both as either; and I am ingenuously too old to regard the gain or loss."

"And why should he," writes Mary Berry to a friend, "when, without the trouble or the ridicule of a marriage, he enjoys almost as much of my society, and every comfort from it, that he could in the nearest connexion? As the willing offering of a grateful and affectionate heart, the time and attentions I bestow upon him have hitherto given me pleasure. Were they to become a duty, and a duty to which the world would attribute interested motives, they would become irksome." Doubtless she would have refused any proffer of the kind: her heart belonged to General O'Hara. To our references we add Pegge's Anec. of the Eng. Lang., ed. by Rev. H. Christmas, Appendix iii.: Notes from a MS. of Horace Walpole, Earl of Orford, on the Names of Localities in London, 1844, 8vo, Lon. Quar. Nor must I omit to notice: Lettres de la Marquise du Deffand à Horace Walpole, écrites dans les Années 1766 à 1780, auxquelles sont jointes des Lettres de Madame du Deffand à Voltaire, écrites dans les Années 1759 à 1775, publiées d'après les originaux déposés à Strawberry-Hill: Nouvelle Edition, augmentée des Extraits des Lettres d'Horace Walpole, (revue et complétée sur l'édition originale de Londres, 1810.) et précédées d'une Notice sur Madame du Deffand par M. A. Thiers, Paris, Firmin Didot, 1861, 2 vols.

"The biographical history of the letters addressed to Horace Walpole is worth a passing notice. He left them, when he died, to his friend Miss Mary Berry, by whom they were published in London in 1810, [4 vols. 8vo.] The following year they were also published in Paris, and since then there have been, we believe, three editions, the last in 1827. It was to that of 1824 that M. Thiers, who was then winning his literary spurs, wrote the biographical notice republished as a preface to the two volumes we have before us."—Lon. Revue, 1861, ii. 329.

The first French edition is dated 1812, 1 vols. 8vo, the 2d ed., 1821, (with a new title page, 1827,) 4 vols. 8vo. The London edition was reviewed in Edin. Rev., Feb. 1811, 290-311, and in Lon. Quar. Rev., May, 1811, 498-528, (by J. W. Croker.) This beautiful, brilliant, frivolous, and unprincipled old woman died in 1780, aged 83. May her "tribe" decrease!

Walpole, Horatio, Lord Walpole, brother of Sir Robert Walpole, and also a distinguished statesman, was b. 1678, and d. 1757. "Few men ever reached and maintained for so many years the highest station which the citizen of a free state can hold, who have enjoyed more power than Sir Robert Walpole, and who have left behind them less just cause of blame or more monuments of the wisdom and virtue for which his country has to thank him."—LORD BROUGHAM: Edin. Rev., lxxi. 179.

"He retired, after more than twenty years of supreme power, with a temper not soured, with a heart not hardened, with simple tastes, with frank manners, and with a capacity for friendship. No stain of treachery, of ingratitude, or of cruelty rests on his memory."—LORD MACAULAY: Edin. Rev., lviii. 242.

"The fact of a man with an estate of about 2000*l.* a year at first, and which never rose to much above 4000*l.*, having lived extravagantly, and amassed above 200,000*l.*, is not at all explained by Mr. Coxe; and it is mainly on this expensive living and accumulation of fortune that the suspicions which hang over his memory rest."—LORD BROUGHAM: Select. Time of Geo. III., ed. 1875, i. 312, n.

But hear something on the other side:

"His enemies pay him the compliment of saying, 'They do believe now that he did not plunder the public, as he was accused (as they accused him) of doing, he having died in such circumstances' . . . It is certain he is dead very poor: his debts, with his legacies, which are trifling, amount to fifty thousand pounds."—HORACE WALPOLE to Sir H. Mann, April 15 1745: Letters, ed. 1861, i. 349.

"He was born to 2500*l.* a year, left a nominal estate of 8000*l.*, and died 50,000*l.* in debt."—To Rev. W. Mason, April 18, 1777: Letters, ut supra, vi. 430.

"My father's whole collection, [of pictures,] of which alone he had preserved the prices, cost but 40,000*l.*, and after his death there were three sales of pictures, among which were all the long-lengths of Vandyke but three."—To Rev. W. Cole, July 12, 1779: Letters, ut supra, vii. 227.

The remainder of the collection was, in 1779, sold to the Emperor of Russia for £10,555. So there was a great profit on the pictures. Horace describes his late father—or, to be perfectly safe, I will say the late premier—in terms which provoke a smile:

"To conform myself to the views of the excellent man, the glory of human nature, who made us all what we are, has been constantly one of the principal objects of my whole life. . . . My father is ever before my eyes,—not to attempt to imitate him, for I have none of his matchless wisdom, or unassailed virtue, or heroic firmness, but sixty-two years have taught me to gaze on him with ten thousand times the reverence that—I speak it with deep shame—I felt for him at twenty-two, when he stood before me."—To the Earl of Orford, Oct. 5, 1778, and to Sir H. Mann, Aug. 19, 1779: Letters, ut supra, vii. 132, 243. See, also, 483, viii. 531, ix. 480.

"After much unjust abuse heaped upon him, there seems now to be a great disposition to bestow upon him unqualified praise. He was probably the most dexterous party leader we have ever had,—equally skilled to win royal favour, to govern the House of Commons, and to influence, or be influenced by, public opinion."—LORD CAMPBELL: Lives of the Lord Chancellors: Lord Hardwicke, ch. cxxxiv., n. (q. v.)

"But certainly the most remarkable example of the evils produced by popular interference with the foreign policy of the State is afforded by the Spanish armament at the close, and which occasioned the close, of Sir Robert Walpole's glorious, because peaceful, administration; and this, as already remarked, is also the most glaring instance upon record of the mischiefs produced by party. The public voice was raised by the incentives of faction to clamour for war, or at least to complain of alleged maltreatment experienced by smugglers in the Spanish Settlements, marauding under the English flag. Walpole was driven from power and succeeded by his adversaries who afterwards declared privately, as Mr. Burke has recorded, that their only motive for raising the outcry against keeping the peace was the hopelessness of being enabled by any other means to overthrow his long-continued ministry."—LORD BROUGHAM: Hist. and Polit. Discert., ed. 1857, 95.

"He cared for letters no more than his master did; he judged human nature so meanly that one is ashamed to have to own that he was right, and that men could be corrupted by means so base. But with his luring House of Commons he defended liberty for us; with his incredulity he kept Church-craft down. There were persons at Oxford as double-dealing and dangerous as any priests out of Rome; and he routed them both. He gave Englishmen no conquests, but he gave them peace, and ease, and freedom; the three per cents nearly at par, and wheat at five and six and twenty shillings a quarter."—THACKERAY: George the Second.

Let us leave him with a good word:

"He was fit from governing by corruption. He governed by party attachments. The charge of systematic corruption is less applicable to him, perhaps, than to any minister who ever served the crown for so great a length of time."—EDMUND BURKE

Walton, Brian, D.D., b. at Cleveland, North Riding of Yorkshire, 1600, was educated at Magdalene College and Peter House, Cambridge, and subsequently taught school and served as a curate in Suffolk and London; became successively Rector of St. Martins Orgar, London, of Sandon, Essex, and St. Giles-in-the-Fields, London.
 He was also chaplain to Charles I. Having espoused the side of the clergy in the London lithe dispute, (see BREWSTER, SAMUEL, and Abstract of Dr. Walton's Treatise on the Payment of Tithes and Oblations in London, Lon., 1641, 1662, 4to,) he became obnoxious to the Paritians, who sequestered his livings and forced him to fly to Oxford,—a fortunate event, as he thus gained leisure for the preparation of the great work with which his name will ever be honourably connected. Soon after the Restoration he was appointed Chaplain to Charles II., and, Dec. 2, 1660, consecrated Bishop of Chester. He was installed Sept. 11, 1661, and d. in London, Nov. 29 of the same year. His publications which follow must accompany each other. 1. Introductio ad Lectionem Lin-guarum Orientalium Hebraicæ, Chaldaicæ, Samaritanæ,

I must give a few opinions on this charming pastoral: "Whether we consider the elegant simplicity of the style, the ease and unaffected humour of the dialogue the lovely scenes which it delineates, the enchanting pastoral poetry which it contains, or the fine morality it so sweetly inculcates it has hardly its fellow among any of the modern languages.—See John Hawkins

Let me take this opportunity of recommending the amiable and venerable Isaac Walton's Complete Angler, a work the most singular of its kind, breathing the very spirit of contentment, of quiet, and of unalloyed philanthropy and interspersed with some beautiful relics of poetry old songs, and ballads."—See W. L. Bowyer Bowyer's Preface 135

"Indeed, the Complete Angler, whether considered as a treatise on the art of angling or a beautiful pastoral abounding in exquisite descriptions of rural scenery, in sentiments of the purest morality, and in unaffected love of the Creator and his works, has long been ranked among the most popular compositions in our language.—See N. HARRIS NICOLAS

"Among all your quaint readings did you ever light upon Walton's Complete Angler? I asked you the question, and you said—" before. It breathes the very spirit of innocence, purity, and simplicity of heart: there are many choice old verses interspersed in it. It would Christianise every discordant angry passion. Pray make yourself acquainted with it!"—Charles Lamb to Coleridge, Oct 28, 1798 Tufour's Works of Lamb, ed 1867, 18.

"Peter Garrick, the elder brother of David. I think he was an attorney, but he seemed to lead an independent life, and talked all about fishing. Dr Johnson advised him to read Walton's Angler, replying some verses from it."—Flower MS, in Coker's Boswell's Johnson (ed 1848 416, n).

"Isaac Walton's (supra) Angler, which from the bare title might be thought only a sporting book but will be recognized by every student of English literature as one of the most precious gems in the language.—Dr G W Bethune Advertiser to the American Edition.

"Certainly it was not the least among the many excellencies of Isaac Walton's charming book that he helped to render popular no many pure and beautiful lyrics."—Miss Mirford Little Recollections (ch. xv).

"Walton's Complete Angler published in 1653, seems by the title a strange choice out of all the books of half a century, yet its simplicity its sweetness its natural grace and happy intermixture of greater strains with the precepts of angling, have rendered this book decidedly popular and a model which one of the most famous among our late fish writers, and a successful disciple of Isaac Walton in his favourite art (Sir Humphry Davy) has not hesitated for his voluminous to imitate."—Hallam's Lit Hist of Europe, 4th ed 1854 iii 600.

"The collection of the Waltonian Library was the life long labour of the late R. G. W. Bethune, deceased, from whose estate it was purchased by W. Coleman, who has added some what to it, and who had intended that it should become a complete Waltonian Library. This catalogue was prepared during Mr. Coleman's lifetime and seventy-five copies only have been printed in fulfilment of his cherished intention."

I conclude this division of my subject with a few lines which I think will not displease my "Waltonian" readers:

"I have been a great follower of fishing myself, and in its cheerful solitude have passed some of the happiest hours of a constantly happy life."—Fisher's Natural Theology.

Some opinions on Walton's Lives will probably be expected:

"Isaac Walton, adorned with a guileless simplicity of manner, abides from every good man the tribute of applause. It was his ambition to commend to the reverence of posterity the merits of those excellent persons, whose comprehensive learning and exalted piety will ever endear them in our memories."—Dr. Zouch.

"These Lives, in the estimation of an eminent prelate, 'not only do ample justice to individual piety and learning, but throw a mild and cheerful light upon the manners of an interesting age, as well as upon the venerable features of our mother-church. . . . Dr. Zouch's ample notes unite rich instruction and very agreeable entertainment.'"—Bishop JEAN.

"To swell the lists of eulogists of these delightful pieces of biography . . . were an idle and perhaps unprofitable task. . . . Dr. Zouch (as his Life of Sir Philip Sidney, 1808, in 4to, too palpably testifies) was not a fit editor of Walton."—Dr. Dimsin: Lib. Comp., ed. 1828, 628, n.

"He [Dr. Johnson] talked of 'Isaac Walton's Lives,' which was one of his most favourite books. Dr. Donne's Life he said was the most perfect of them."—Boswell: Life of Johnson, Croker's ed., 1818, 452. See, also, Index.

"The Tragedy of Othello, Plato's records of the last four scenes of the career of Socrates, and Isaac Walton's Life of George Herbert are the most pathetic of human compositions."—Wm. Wordsworth: Memoirs for C. Wordsworth.

"Biography, considered as an art, has been destroyed by the greatest of all biographers, James Boswell. His success must be forgotten before Plutarch or Isaac Walton will find either rivals or imitators."—Sir J. Stephen: Edin. Rev., lxvii, 180.

Mr. Hallam, (Lit. Hist. of Europe, 4th ed., 1851, ii, 25, n.) questioning some stories in the Life of Hooker, remarks that Walton "seems to have been a man always too credulous of anecdote." See, also, Blackw. Mag., xlv, 309, 312, xlviii, 201; Amer. Mon. Rev., iii, 30.

"There are no colours in the fairest sky
So fair as these. The feather whence the pen
Was shaped that traced the lives of these good men, Dropped from an angel's wing. With moistened eye
We read of faith and purest charity
In statesman, priest, and humble citizen.
Oh could we copy their mild virtues, then
What joy to live, what blessedness to die!
Methinks their very names shine still and bright
Apart—like glow-worms in the woods of spring,
Or lonely tapers shooting far a light
Thru guides and cheers—or seen, like stars on high,
Satellites burning in a lucid ring
Around meek Walton's heavenly memory."

WORDSWORTH.

Walton was also the author of several sets of verses prefixed to volumes published by his contemporaries, and of some other minor literary performances: see the Life of Isaac Walton, including Notices of his Contemporaries, by Thomas Zouch, D.D., 1823, (some 1824,) 1p. 8vo, 1. p., 4to, 1826, 12mo; and Works by, and ascribed to, Isaac Walton, in Bethune's ed. of The Complete Angler, 1847, &c., 199–203. See, also, CHALKHILL, JOHN, (repub. by S. W. Singer, Chiswick, 1820, 12mo), proved by Sir N. H. Nicolas to have been a relation of Walton's second wife, (a copy of Thealma and Clearchus is priced in Bibl. Anglo-Poet., 120, £8 8s.) SKEPPINGTON, Sir JOHN. "Happy Old Man! whose worth all mankind knows
Except thyself,—who charitably shows
The ready way to virtue and to praise,
The way to many long and happy days."

THOMAS PLATMAN, died 1672.

"Not many English authors have possessed a more attractive or more strictly idiomatic style, not many have exhibited a wider variety of expression, than Isaac Walton; but Walton had no classical learning, and his orthography hopes for hant goit (Complete Angler, edition of 1653, p. 160) shows that he knew as little of French."—G. P. MARSH: Lects. on the Eng. Lang., 1860, Lect. IV.

I am pleased to be able to conclude this article by the announcement that Walton's townsmen of the present generation (I write in 1870) propose to pay a long-neglected debt of their predecessors, by erecting in Stafford a memorial to one who did so much to commemorate the virtues and accomplishments of his own contemporaries.
